New Music-Art Center Named

The College's new Music-Art Center, now under construction, will be named the Christian A. Johnson Memorial Building, according to an announcement by President James I. Armstrong at the Parents' Luncheon held in the Memorial Field House on October 21.

The $1.5 million teaching facility, scheduled for dedication in the fall of 1968, has been provided by a grant from the Endeavor Foundation of New York City.

The late Christian A. Johnson, a prominent industrialist and financier, had a lifelong interest in education. He established the Endeavor Foundation in 1952 to extend his charitable support of education. Following his death in 1964 friends and business associates established a $50,000 endowed Scholarship in his memory at Middlebury to assist students majoring in Economics.

In making the announcement President Armstrong said, "Middlebury College is proud that our new Music-Art Center will bear the name of one who had a lifelong concern for educating young people. Particularly meaningful to all of us at Middlebury is the fact that Mr. Johnson was the beloved father of an able young lady who graduated in the Class of 1967 as a Fine Arts major."

Ski Team Coaches Selected

John F. Bower, '63, has been appointed instructor in physical education for men (see page 11), and will become varsity ski coach in the 1968–69 season. He is unable to coach the team this year as he must protect his amateur standing so he can participate as member of the American Nordic Team in the 1968 Olympics.

Gary E. Vaughn, a former Olympic skier and coach at Dartmouth College, has been named varsity ski coach for the 1967–68 academic year. He served as manager of the Old Forge Ski Area, N. Y., in 1962 and has coached the Alpine squad at Dartmouth. In 1964 he was Dartmouth's head coach, substituting for Al Merrill, who was in Europe with the U. S. Olympics.

Freshman Fathers' Occupations

Many educators, including four college presidents, have sent their sons or daughters to Middlebury this year as freshmen. Twenty-seven fathers of new students are college professors. Four are department heads, one is a dean and one an athletic director. Among fathers engaged in college administration are a vice president and a director of alumni relations and placement.

Public and private secondary school educators with sons or daughters in the freshman class include school superintendents and principals, department chairmen, teachers and a guidance director.

The fathers of the Class of 1971 represent almost every branch of endeavor. There are newspaper, magazine and book publishers and editors, lawyers, theatrical managers, city, state and federal personnel, diplomatic aides, grocery store managers, food and stock brokers, firemen and resort owners.

Many branches of medicine are represented, and many types of business and manufacturing. Scientific researchers, advertising men, building contractors, salesmen, buyers and accountants are listed, and engineering is represented in all categories.

Other fathers include a captain in the British Royal Navy, camp director, port steward, lobster fisherman, stamp dealer, school custodian, hospital administrator, U. S. Merchant Marine bosun, tree farmer, airlines pilot, hair stylist, plumber, telephone repairman, maintenance electrician, banker, architect, photographer, veterinarian, plant foreman, welder and funeral director.

"To Discover Things More Remote Than Our Knowledge"

By President James I. Armstrong

Freshman Convocation Address given at Mead Memorial Chapel September 17, 1967

> "The light which we have gained was given us not to be ever staring on, but by it to discover things more remote than our knowledge."

Thus, John Milton in the 17th Century, and thus it is with us in the 20th Century at Middlebury.

Some seventeen or eighteen years of living, twelve or thirteen years of formal and informal learning, a decision to earn a baccalaureate degree, an admissions selection process—all preceded this advent or adventure which begins this morning for the Class of 1971. For our part we have been preparing for you over a considerable span of time.

The College does have a fair amount of experience in baccalaureate education. A college, you know, is a remarkable entity, for it remains ever young while ever growing older. You are the 168th class to enter the College, and the College's basic aim is at once old and young: to help the entering class to discover things more remote than your present knowledge and our present knowledge. It is an adventure, a quest, and the method is Socratic rather than dictatorial or didactic. We shall ask questions and you will ask questions; there will be no neat advice, no ready answers to the kinds of questions we shall ask and you will ask—to discover things more remote than your present knowledge. Thus, you will probably not experience very often that kind of confrontation which a New Yorker cartoon last spring humorously depicted—an unchastened young man with a very irate and authoritarian father who says:

> "This is not a debate, a discussion, a man-to-man talk or a meeting of minds. I'm telling you something."

What you will encounter is precisely debate and discussion, intelligently informed and controlled by relevant data. On the other hand, and by way of contrast, you will not find your college completely adopting Oscar Wilde's delightfully ironic precept that:

> "It is always a silly thing to give advice, but to give good advice is absolutely fatal."

You will ask for advice, and within limits we shall be prepared to respond, for we do believe we know in general whither we are tending, the direction in which we go, but the horizons—things remoter than our present knowledge—are forever stretching beyond our grasp.

So we welcome you, the Class of 1971, to Middlebury College. Your college exists for learning, especially undergraduate learning, and this learning should have relevance to your world—a world where there is and always has been metaphorically both a flowing river, change, flux and the fact of the river—the changeless and permanent. Here at Middlebury you live in a precious span of time where learning must be relevant to this changing world, where you have an invaluable slight remove—that penultimate stance, which makes possible for you a special kind of perspective. Let me cite one or two examples. Surely in your years here you will consider the threat of brutalization in our society which rightly demands our most serious concern. Shall we reap the whirlwind of our own arrogance in confining the legitimacy of the "American dream" to white men? We avert our eyes, even close our eyes, to the experience of the past, for we have known what happened to earlier societies which allowed self-interest, ignorance and prejudice to prevail, e.g., the late Roman Empire which was in part destroyed from within by its former slaves. Consider also the need for a dynamic view of international relations as man draws closer upon man; the critical need for language is at once proximate as well as ultimate—the time when no man will be a foreigner to another. No one can escape consideration of the scientific and technological revolution which both emancipates and complicates, where the sciences become the humanities. In his message to Congress in 1862 Lincoln said: "The dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate to the stormy present. The occasion is piled high with difficulty, and we must rise with the occasion. As our case is new, so we must think anew and act anew."

In the midst of such considerations I hope you will be able to find those characteristics of liberal learning which form a kind of permanency, which give us that direction of which I spoke. Woodrow Wilson got to the heart of it many years ago:

> "The object of the college . . . is the intellectual and spiritual life. . . . By the intellectual and spiritual life I mean the life which enables the mind to comprehend and make proper use of the modern world. . . . The educated man is to be discovered by his point of view, by the temper of his mind, by his attitude toward life, and by his fair way of thinking. He can see, he can discriminate, he can combine ideas and perceive whither they lead; he has insight and compassion. His mind is a practised instrument of appreciation."

This is not a definition of liberal learning, but it is an articulate statement of what we aim for at Middlebury. The aims of liberal learning seem to hold firm from the Academy of Plato to the Idea of a University by Cardinal Newman; the means to the ends will need constant adaptation.

Let's take the words of Woodrow Wilson—"the educated man is to be discovered . . . by the temper of his mind, by his attitude toward life . . ." There are three interrelated but distinguishable parts of your life here at Middlebury—curricular, extra-curricular and social. What will be your temper of mind? Your attitude toward these? Think of your response both in terms of the context in which you find yourself and in terms of yourself—i.e., Middlebury College is a coeducational residential liberal arts college or community—people not a thing—bound together by a common purpose of learning. Your temper of mind or your attitude is really a way of saying what is important to you, for your response to the world of Middlebury and elsewhere will be a direct function of what your values are. If your expectations are in accord with your values, there will be no crucial disappointment—if you want to learn and expect to find joy in learning, if you see the opportunity despite inevitable human shortcomings, yours will be a productive experience among us. The converse hardly needs explication. As Robert Frost said:

> "The world is full of willing people: some willing to work, the rest willing to let them!"

Unrealistic expectations and selfishly individualistic behavior—a kind of privatism—have their corrosive, sometimes destructive, consequences for all.

Your arrival at Middlebury presents each of you with a new range of freedom and a new possibility of independence. Our expectation is that you will use the freedom as a highway to a new sensibility, a light to lighten your values, and the result will be a competence and a conscience that will give you your own posture, your own independence. While you are here, you will find that the College is not a neutral entity, lukewarm like the Laodiceans. The College has made certain choices, has determined to be this rather than that—and we ask, for example, that you honor the conventions which govern our life together. The conventions are a product of the past and the present; they look to the future; they are not immutable, but they should be honored until changed.

Perhaps some of you are familiar with Plato's investigation of the nature of justice in The Republic. In the Second Book young Glaucon, a little dismayed and puzzled by the view that justice, fair-mindedness, may be only a matter of social convention, seeks to show that justice is not merely useful but intrinsically good as an inward state of the soul. He tells the tale of Gyges' ring:

> "The story tells how he was a shepherd in the King's service. One day there was a great storm, and the ground where his flock was feeding was rent by an earthquake. Astonished at the sight, he went down into chasm and saw, among other wonders of which the story tells, a brazen horse, hollow, with windows in its sides. Peering in, he saw a dead body, which seemed to be of more than human size. It was naked save for a gold ring, which he took from the finger and made his way out. When the shepherds met, as they did every month, to send an account to the King of the state of his flocks, Gyges came wearing the ring. As he was sitting with the others, he happened to turn the crown of the ring inside his hand. At once he became invisible, and his companions, to his surprise, began to speak of him as if he had left them. Then, as he was fingering the ring, he turned the crown outwards and became visible again. With that, he set about testing the ring to see if it really had this power, and always with the same result: according as he turned the crown inside or out he vanished and reappeared. After this discovery he contrived to be one of the messengers sent to the court. There he seduced the Queen, and with her help murdered the King and siezed the throne." (Cornford's Translation)

Why should he not do as he pleases? Does his impunity free him from any constraint? You have a new freedom—a kind of invisibility from old associations, former teachers and your parents. How will you use it? What values will govern your life in classroom, in extra-curricular activities, in the residence halls, on the athletic fields, in the fraternities. The real question raised by Gyges' ring is absolutely fundamental—will you use your freedom in accordance with your inner convictions, intelligently held, or in accordance with an external expediency? I do not mean mere conformity or compliance—I do mean a judgment based on conviction, knowledge with a conscience—a way of proceeding and judging which is yours and governs your life as one person, not one way in academic work, another way in residence and yet another in social life.

Listen in for a moment to a part of a conversation between a young man and a young woman on a date after a pleasant meal at an elegant restaurant. The passages come from Ernest Gordon's "The Womanly Art of Self-Defense—A No Play." The young man in this particular dialogue (it could just as well have been the young lady) has been maintaining that "discipline means suppression and everyone knows that's bad for you." Essentially he is saying we should follow our "natural desires," and he ardently champions free love.

> She: Why are you going to college if you think discipline only suppresses you? In my college we look on discipline as a way of becoming liberated from the control of prejudices and passions.
> He: That's different.
> She: No it's not. You're a junior. Right? You're majoring in history. And the discipline you accepted of your own volition has enabled you to move around in the subject with a certain degree of freedom. Yet you think you can play around with people without any kind of discipline. What morality is, really, is the disciplining of yourself for your own sake and the sake of others."

The young man launches various counter-attacks utilizing the big brother approach, disparagement and cunningly intricate arguments which all miss the mark. The young man finally capitulates: "You're not coming with me. I realize that. Don't give me a sermon besides."

> She: I'm trying to use my freedom in order to be a person in my own right and to do something in life that will help other people as well as myself!! I'm not afraid of being moral . . . while the decision to do this or to do that is mine, . . . I've got other people to help me. I've got the help of the people in the past who demonstrated the meaning of things I've been trying to say, by the quality of their lives. . . .

The conversation continues and ends with the young man saying:

> He: This has been a fairly expensive lecture.
> She: You'd better take me home now.
> He: Would you go out with me again next weekend?
> She: You want to see me again?? Why??
> He: God knows.

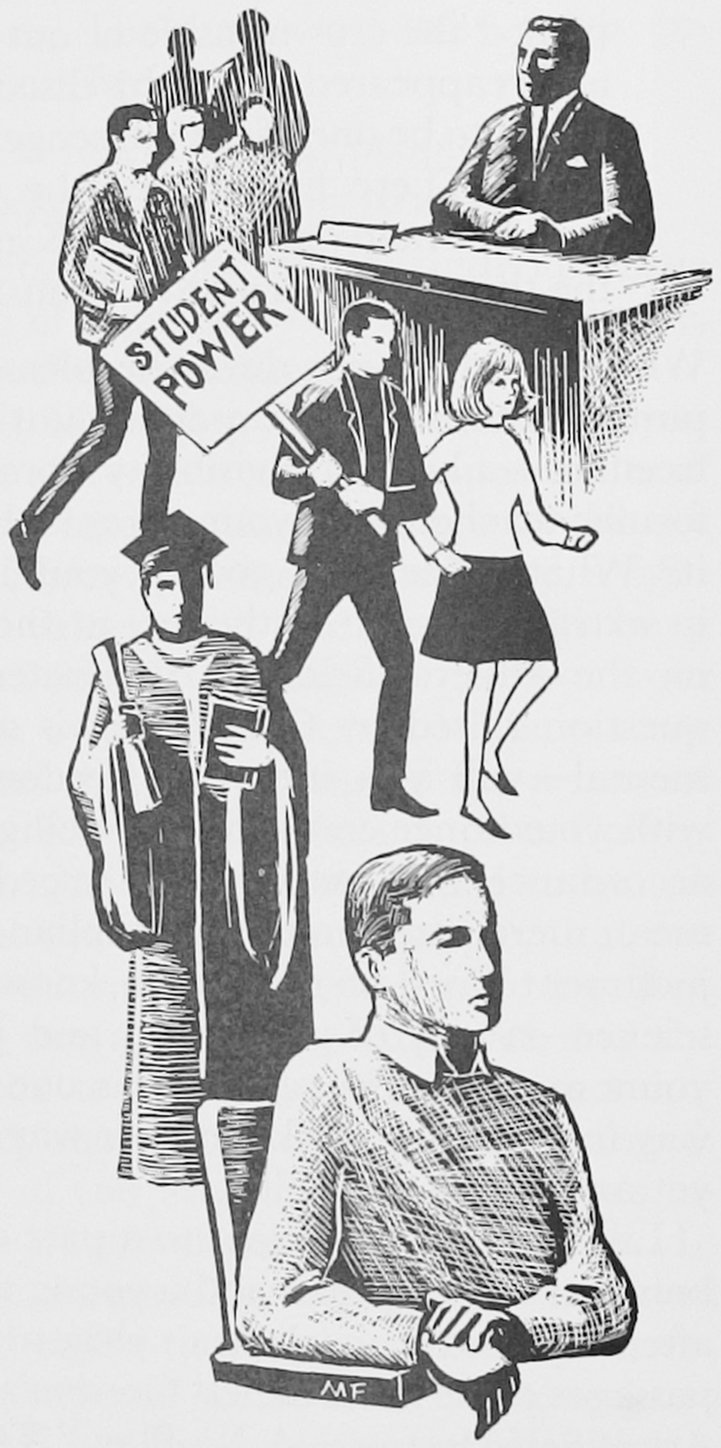
What this young lady says so directly and so simply, so honestly and by no means piously, strips away the slick, the ersatz, the superficial, the specious argument.

Your life at college is finally one life as knowledge is one. An educated man does not separate his academic from his non-academic life with a different modus vivendi for each. In the liberal arts, knowledge is knowledge with a conscience, not just an intellectual exercise like some sterile ritual through which we mumble our way, secretly disgarding it as irrelevant. Freedom and discipline, competence and accountability are bound together in an inevitable interrelationship for the whole of life. To ask what these relationships are is to ask compelling, important questions about the nature of man—who we are and what we ought to become.

I hope you will ask such questions.

the student's place within the college

By John Peter DeYoe, '69



On September 19, 1967, President James I. Armstrong announced the formation of a Commission on Student Life at Middlebury College composed of three deans, three faculty members, and four students. The Commission's purpose will be "to submit recommendations to the President which the Commission believes may improve the living experience of our students and hence strengthen education at Middlebury."

In a letter sent to each member of the Commission, the President wrote that "the attitudes of students today are obviously a product of the society in which they find their being, and there is no possibility—nor indeed desirability—in seeking to sever them from their own origins and their own contexts." Dr. Armstrong emphasized that "there is every reason for the College to re-examine its conventions, its customs, and its rules to see whether they make sense as guidelines for student life today." The ten member Commission will examine four areas of student life at Middlebury: student social regulations including visiting hours, the administration of the residence rule, student organizations and student responsibility, and the participation of students in policy-making and academic decision-making.

The Administration will be represented by Dean of the College Dennis O'Brien, chairman of the commission; Mrs. Elizabeth Kelly, Dean of Women; and Dr. Bruce B. Peterson, '56, Dean of Men. Faculty members serving on the Commission are Dr. Howard M. Munford, '34, chairman of the American Literature Department; Rudolf K. Haerle, Jr., chairman of the Sociology Department; and Dr. Frederick C. Cabot, assistant professor of English who was a senior tutor at Harvard University. The Commission's four student members were chosen to represent different viewpoints and are all, in COLLEGE PARK, Md.—The Congress of the National Student Association adopted almost unanimously a resolution calling for a sweeping increase in "student power" on the nation's campuses.

The basic viewpoint of the supporters of the resolution was stated by Charles Jeffers of the University of North Carolina, who said: "We should no longer adhere to regulations either on campus or in society unless we participate directly in making those decisions."

the words of Dean O'Brien, "very much their own people." Chosen from the Class of 1969 are Susan Shattuck, Gladwyne, Pennsylvania; Francis Chin, Charlestown, Massachusetts; and Gilbert Kujovich, Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. Representing the Class of 1970 is Barbara Ottinger of Basking Ridge, New Jersey.

The idea of a commission to take an introspective look at Middlebury draws on the experiences of other educational institutions. For example, in November, 1966, Brown University President Ray L. Heffner appointed a nine member Advisory Committee on Student Conduct which he asked to "examine the relationship between student conduct and the proper atmosphere of a university." After conducting an extensive survey which determined students' attitudes towards social regulations and student behavior patterns, the Brown Committee formulated a working philosophy and then proceeded to make twenty-eight specific recommendations relating to student life at Brown.

Before Middlebury's own Commission submits its recommendations to President Armstrong it will also have to gather information and agree on common objectives. It seems to me that the Commission cannot escape coming to grips with one key question: what should be the student's place within the College? In answering the above question the Commission will be forced to turn to the present and ask where exactly does the student stand now—what powers and responsibilities does he hold at present? Thus to help the Commission with its homework, the remainder of this article will attempt to describe the place of the student within the College. The subject is not merely academic, for the demands for "student power" are insistent.

I find it necessary to formulate an operational definition of the college; that is, how the institution works. The traditional definitions of the college as a "community of scholars" or an organization of competing interest groups (administration, faculty, students, trustees) contribute little towards understanding the place of the student.

"Complex organizations in American society are bureaucratized, and the schools are no exception," declares Professor Ronald G. Corwin in A Sociology of Education. Thus I believe it accurate to describe the college as an essentially bureaucratic organization consisting of three sectors or "distinctive parts." In other words, there are three general types of activities that are carried out within a college. What are these three types of activities? What part does the student play within each of the three sectors?

The three sectors can be called the academic sector, the institutional sector, and the supporting sector. Briefly, the function of each sector is as follows: in the academic sector the transfer of knowledge from teacher to student takes place according to definite and orderly patterns; the institutional sector is concerned with the well-being of the entire institution—keeping it running smoothly and planning for the future; the supporting sector administers to the student in his non-academic life at the college.

The academic sector is what college is all about. One comes to college to learn and to be liberally educated. What one learns—the curriculum—is determined by what society judges should be taught. Thus "it isn't a question of what the College needs from society, but what society needs from the College" (in a booklet published by the Middlebury College Challenge Fund). A complex technologically and scientifically oriented society requires extensive knowledge in many fields. The College's curriculum mirrors society's need for extensive knowledge. Middlebury has two dozen distinct academic departments. Even within these departments knowledge is subdivided further so that one does not major merely in political science, for example. One may specialize in American political institutions, international relations and foreign policy, or comparative government.

The machinery which regulates the transfer of knowledge from teacher to pupil is institutionalized and very, very hard to change. Even a faculty committee, the Faculty Educational Policy Committee, could not persuade the Faculty to make changes in the degree requirements and the five course rule. While the outward professions of the Faculty are "to give the student a sense of a part in his own destiny," the prudent student learns to passively accept knowledge. As one Middlebury professor told me, "All we're really asking from the students is obedience." Thus the role of the students in the academic sector is minor. Students must choose for themselves what discipline to study, but they have no power to change the content of the curriculum or to alter the machinery of the learning process.

In the second sector, the (Please turn to page 55)

With the Faculty

By

Dr. Paul M. Cubeta,

Dean of the Faculty

This September twenty-five new colleagues joined the Faculty of Middlebury College—a record number and clear evidence that the Faculty is growing in both strength and numbers. The Faculty-student ratio now is 11.5 to 1, the smallest it has been since the early days of the College's history.

The new Faculty has been called to Middlebury at all ranks from Instructor to Endowed Professor and has joined 17 of our 23 departments. It may be the most internationally educated Faculty ever drawn to the College in one year. New members have studied at Oxford; the University of Geneva; the Sorbonne; the University of Zurich; St. Joseph's Pontifical Seminary in Alwaye, India; the University of Freiburg, Germany; Leningrad State University—to say nothing of many major American universities and colleges. They have taught at universities as diversified as Dartmouth and Indiana, Cornell and the University of Geneva, the University of Peshawar in West Pakistan and the University of Wyoming, Harvard and Connecticut College.

They include a Presbyterian minister and a Catholic priest, an Olympic Nordic ski champion and an expert on locust control in the Middle East and East Africa, a high school director of forensics and an instructor at a French lycee. Of their many publications the following would be representative:

"Wild types and mutant stocks of Mormoniella."
A review of I. P. Kozljaninova Sovremennoe literaturnoe proiznoshenie (orfoepija).
Within the Cloistures (written in Malayalam).
"The Microwave Spectrum of Methylhypochlorite."

And perhaps finally there is no better way of describing the quality of liberal education at Middlebury than to consider what this training and these talents will do when committed to the teaching of our undergraduates.

HUMANITIES DIVISION

English, Drama, Speech

Dale DeLetis
M.A., Stanford
Instructor and Director of Debate

Mr. DeLetis graduated summa cum laude with Phi Beta Kappa honors from Catholic University of America in 1963. Before coming to Middlebury, he was director of forensics and debate and manager of the drama program at Serra High School in San Mateo, California.

Dr. Howard M. Munford, '34, was recently named Abernethy Professor of American Literature and Chairman of the Department, succeeding Professor Reginald L. Cook, '24, who resigned the chairmanship after 37 years. Dr. Munford earned his B. S. degree from Middlebury in 1934, his master's from the Bread Loaf School of English in 1939, and his Ph. D. from Harvard in 1951. Except for his years of service as a naval officer in World War II he has been a member of the Middlebury faculty since 1941. Professor Munford received Fulbright Lectureships in American Literature at Abo Academy and Turku University, Finland, in 1955, and at the University of Freiburg, Germany, in 1963. During the summer of 1957, he lectured in India under the American Specialists Program of the State Department, and in 1958 he was a member of a delegation of professors who toured the U. S. S. R. He has also held a fellowship from the Fund for the Advancement of Education for the Study of the Philosophy of Science at Stanford University. He is now at work on an edition of W. D. Howells' The Minister's Charge for the Indiana University Press.

Dr. Munford

Carolyn Greenstein
M.A., Columbia
Visiting Lecturer (Part time)

Mrs. Greenstein, the wife of David Greenstein, an Instructor in English, received her bachelor's degree at Swarthmore and her master's degree at Columbia, where she is writing her doctoral dissertation on Ben Jonson's non-dramatic poetry.

Bart F. Teush
A.B., Swarthmore
Instructor

A native of Stamford, Texas, Mr. Teush is working for his Doctor of Fine Arts at the Yale School of Drama. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. As part of his duties, he will direct several drama productions.

Music

Emory M. Fanning
Mus. A.D., Boston University
Assistant Professor

Mr. Fanning received his Bachelor of Music degree from Oberlin and his master's degree from the University of Illinois. From 1964 to 1967 he was Assistant Professor of Music at Boston University. He has also served as organist and choirmaster at All Saints' Church in Brookline, Massachusetts.

Philosophy

Eugene D. Sapadin
M.A., Harvard
Instructor

Mr. Sapadin returns to his alma mater, where he had previously been an Instructor in Philosophy during the fall of 1966. A member of Phi Beta Kappa, Mr. Sapadin was a teaching fellow at Harvard for one year and is completing his graduate work at Claremont.

Religion

Norman C. Nelson
Th.M., Princeton Theological Seminary
Lecturer and Assistant Chaplain

A graduate of Westmont College, Mr. Nelson undertook graduate study in Philosophy at the University of California at Los Angeles and received his B. D. degree from San Francisco Theological Seminary. An ordained minister of the United Presbyterian Church, he served as assistant minister at the Ojai Presbyterian Church in 1965–66.

Cyriac K. Pullapilly
M.A., DePaul University
Instructor

A native of Kerala, India, Reverend Pullapilly received his bachelor's degree from St. Joseph Pontifical Seminary in Alwaye, India. An ordained Catholic priest, he is completing his doctoral dissertation on The Legacy of Caesar Baronius at the University of Chicago and has taught at Illinois State University. He is the author of four books in India and has contributed articles to several periodicals there.

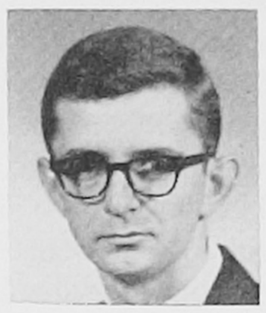
DIVISION OF FOREIGN LANGUAGES

French

Jacques M. Krouchi
CAPES
Visiting Assistant Professor

A native of Paris, M. Krouchi received his license es lettres from the Sorbonne and holds the diplôme d'Etudes Superieures and C.A.P.E.S. in English. He taught at the Lycee-Orleans in 1965 and at the Lycee-Meaux from 1965–67.

German



Walter M. Hurley, Jr.
M.A., University of California at Berkeley
Instructor

Mr. Hurley did his undergraduate work at the College of San Mateo and the University of California at Berkeley, where he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. He studied at the University of Freiburg, Germany, in 1964–65. He received his master's degree at Cornell, where he taught before coming to Middlebury.

Russian

Robert L. Baker
Ph.D., University of Michigan
Associate Professor of Russian and Dean of the Russian Summer School
Acting Chairman

Mr. Baker did his undergraduate work at the University of Colorado, where he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. He earned both his master's and his doctorate at the University of Michigan. He attended Leningrad State University as an exchange student and for the past seven years was a member of the faculty of Indiana University, where he was also director of the NDEA Russian Language Institute. Mr. Baker has contributed several articles and reviews to linguistic journals.

Spanish

Nora S. Wright
M.A., Middlebury
Instructor

Miss Wright took her undergraduate and graduate work at Middlebury. She has also studied at the New York University Graduate School in Spain. Before beginning her teaching career at Western College, she served as secretary to the director of the NYU School in Madrid from 1963–66.

ROBERT J. LAVALLEE
Ph.D., University of Vermont
Visiting Assistant Professor

Mr. Lavallee received his bachelor's, master's, and doctorate degrees from the University of Vermont, where he served as an instructor in the Evening Division. He is engaged in research on behavior patterns.

Sociology

RUDOLPH K. HAERLE
Ph.D., University of Chicago
Associate Professor and Chairman

Mr. Haerle returns to Middlebury, where he taught from 1962 to 1966. This past year he has been senior research sociologist and project director at the Center for Urban Education in New York. He received his bachelor's degree from Dartmouth and his master's and doctor's degrees from the University of Chicago. He has also taught at Wilson Junior College. He is co-author of a chapter in The Educational Crisis and the Middle School Plan.

HENRY PANG
M.A., University of Arkansas
Instructor

Mr. Pang is completing his doctorate at American University. He comes to Middlebury from the University of Wyoming, where he has served as an instructor in Sociology for the past two years. Previously he was an instructor at Russell Sage College. He is the author of several articles on anthropology-sociology studies.

CHARLES W. J. SCAIFE
Ph.D., Cornell
Assistant Professor

Recently a National Science Foundation Postdoctoral Fellow at the University of York, England, Mr. Scaife received his bachelor's and doctor's degrees from Cornell. He has written technical articles on his work in Borazine Chemistry and Vibrational Spectroscopy for Chemical and Engineering journals.

Geology

ROGER LAURENT
Ph.D., University of Geneva
Assistant Professor

A native of Geneva, Mr. Laurent did his undergraduate and graduate work at the University of Geneva, where he has been a member of its faculty this past year. His research has centered on metamorphic rocks in the Alps, and he has written papers on mineralogical and petrographical studies and dating by radioactivity.

Physics

John S. Rigden
Ph.D., Johns Hopkins University
Associate Professor

Mr. Rigden received his Bachelor of Science degree from Eastern Nazarene College, where he has taught for six years, the last three as Associate Professor and department chairman. He served as a Harvard Research Fellow in 1960–61 and during the past year as a Research Fellow at Harvard Project Physics. He has published several articles on microwave spectroscopy.

Physical Education for Women

Faith Gulick
M.A., Mills College
Assistant Professor

Miss Gulick has been teaching choreography at Connecticut College, where she was also administrative assistant to the director of the School of Dance. She received her bachelor's degree in Music from Connecticut College before doing her graduate work in Dance at Mills College. She was a dance teacher in Westchester, New York, and has also taught as an Assistant Professor at Colby College.

Physical Education for Men

John F. Bower
A.B., Middlebury
Instructor

While at Middlebury, Mr. Bower participated in world championships as a member of the U. S. Nordic F.I.S. Teams in 1962 and 1966, and as a member of the U. S. Olympic Nordic Team in 1964. He was Junior National Combined and Cross Country Champion in 1958, N.C.A.A. Nordic Combined Champion in 1961 and National Nordic Combined Champion in 1966 and 1967. He was in Europe with the U. S. National Nordic Squad in 1967 and has been named to the U. S. Olympic Nordic Training Squad preparing for the 1968 Winter Olympics. Mr. Bower is currently completing requirements for his master's degree at Springfield College. In 1968–69 Mr. Bower will take on additional responsibilities as Varsity Ski Coach and Assistant Track Coach at Middlebury.

MILITARY SCIENCE AND TACTICS

Captain Herbert E. Koenigsbauer, Jr.
A.B., Bowdoin
Assistant Professor

After graduating from Bowdoin, Captain Koenigsbauer took the Armor Officers Basic Course at Fort Knox, Kentucky. He has served as Platoon Leader and Troop Executive Officer with the 2nd Squadron of the 4th U. S. Cavalry in Schwabach, Germany, and as Company Commander, First Training Brigade, U. S. Army Training Center Armor at Fort Knox. He comes to Middlebury after a tour of duty as Infantry Training Adviser in Duc My, South Vietnam. He holds the Bronze Star Medal and medals for Vietnam service and campaign.

Captain Antonio R. Villasenor
A.B., University of California at Los Angeles
Assistant Professor

Captain Villasenor has attended Officers Candidate School and taken Airborne Training at Fort Benning, Georgia. He has served as Training Officer of "A" Company and Company Commander of Headquarters Company of the 1st Battalion, 1st Brigade, Fort Ord, California. He comes to Middlebury after a tour of duty as Assistant Battalion Adviser in the 7th Division of the Army of the Republic of Vietnam, Kien Hoa, Vietnam. He holds the Bronze Star Medal, the Combat Infantry Badge, the Cross of Gallantry, the Parachutist Badge, and Vietnam Service and Campaign Medals.

One of the more formidable tasks confronting Middlebury is to attract a brilliant faculty in those disciplines which need graduate assistants or the resources of large metropolitan centers, such as museums, theatres, and libraries. We should not pretend to offer inaccessible opportunities and facilities. What we must do instead is to establish as a challenge and an opportunity what can be uniquely ours. These goals are eloquently stated by a new colleague in his letter of resignation to the university with which he had been associated for many years:

"I have chosen to join a Faculty which is vigorously confronting the difficult problem of defining the role of the rural liberal arts college in a predominantly urban society. The opportunity to be a part of this venture and to build a vital curriculum is the sort of challenge which is particularly attractive to me at this point in my career.

"While I am deeply grateful for my years [here] and shall miss my students and colleagues, Middlebury College, by virtue of the uncertain but rich possibilities of its future, offers a life which demands my participation."

When the final gun marks the end of a college football contest late in the afternoon of a crisp, fall day, fans soon leave the intricacies of the game behind once they file out of the stadium, but the coach's work goes on.

Coach Nelson

To a College Coach: Football is a Way of Life

By Max Petersen

To get a behind-the-scenes look at what this work entails we follow Middlebury College head football coach Walter "Duke" Nelson through a year-round schedule that is similar to one used by most college coaches.

Once a game is over Duke has little time to sit back and unwind for he must start planning for the next one. He often makes the long walk from Porter Field to the Field House with the coach of the opposition. Both men check on the conditions of their teams and offer a word of encouragement or congratulations. After a brief talk with his players he leaves for home with football still on his mind.

Walter J. (Duke) Nelson, '32, director of athletics and head football coach, is now serving his 26th year as a member of the College's athletic staff. A native of Dorchester, Mass., he attended the Tilton (N.H.) Preparatory School before matriculating at Middlebury. Duke graduated from the College in 1932 after an outstanding undergraduate life as an athlete and student. He played on the Panther football, hockey and baseball teams and served as captain of three of these varsity teams. He also played golf, tennis and freshman basketball.

After graduation, Duke was a member of Middlebury's athletic staff from 1932 to 1936. During these years he coached varsity baseball and hockey, freshman football, and taught physical education.

From 1936–39, Duke was hockey and baseball coach and football line coach at Union. He coached varsity football and baseball at R.P.I. before entering the U.S. Navy during World War II. After four years duty in the navy's aviation pre-flight training program, he left the service as a lieut. commander.

He returned to Middlebury College in 1946 as varsity football coach and assistant director of athletics. After the retirement of Arthur Brown, he was made director of athletics and continued to coach football. He has also been coach of hockey and golf.

During 21 seasons, Duke's Middlebury football teams have won 80 games, lost 62, and recorded nine ties. And his Panther teams have won or shared the Vermont Collegiate Championship nine times since 1946.

At 10 a.m. Sunday morning, Nelson returns to Memorial Field House where he participates by phone in a radio program, which analyzes Vermont collegiate and high school football played that weekend. Following a professional evaluation of both the game just completed and the one coming up, he adjourns to the training room to check on injured players with Trainer Richard Waterman and the team physician, Dr. George Parton.

All three talk with the injured, and Dr. Parton and Trainer Waterman conduct examinations and prescribe treatments. It is from this session that Duke is able to determine which personnel will be available for duty next week.

Duke also finds time Sunday morning to discuss problems, suggestions or strategy with any player interested in a word with the coach. He has a little time to relax Sunday afternoon, but more than likely is in front of the television set watching professional football and at the same time running over new plays in his mind.

Meanwhile, the member of the coaching staff who was out Saturday scouting the Panthers' next opponent, spends the day preparing the preliminary scouting report he will deliver at the Sunday night staff meeting in Nelson's office. Line coach Erkki Mackey and backfield coach Wendell Forbes alternate in handling the scouting.

As soon as the processed game films arrive in Middlebury—usually about 6:30 p.m. Sunday—Duke holds a viewing session for his coaching staff at the Field House. The films are run through several times for a close look at the action with concentration on the scoring plays. No detailed study is made at that time.

Then the scout gives a general report on the Panthers' next opponent. If time permits at the Sunday night session, one reel of the next opponent's game from the previous year is looked at "for general tendencies of play." At about 9 p.m. the coaches head for home for a rest after a hectic weekend.

Nelson and his staff are back at the Field House by 9 o'clock Monday morning for another staff meeting. Duke calls morning and afternoon sessions Monday through Friday during the season.

Game films are reviewed at the Monday morning meeting with a closer look at the various positions. There is no definite grading of individual performances, but the coaches check all positions for execution of assignments, technique of block and defensive reaction to the play. Their main objective is to determine where additional teaching should be directed and if teaching techniques have been effective.

Outstanding performances are noted and mentioned to all squad members at practice that afternoon. When the last film has been scrutinized, the scout gives a detail report to the staff. Based on his observations the Panther coaches map tentative game plans for the next opponent.

Players get their first chance to see their accomplishments and mistakes 5–6 p.m. Monday, when they view the film with the coaches in the Field House classroom. The squad also hears the scouting report between reels of film.

Both projector and film are made available in the Field House to all squad members for use in their free time. Squad members usually like to be alone when they first see the film, but later in the week welcome a staff member on hand to break down parts of the game and commend or criticize by position.

An informal practice session without pads is scheduled 4–5 p.m. Monday for those who can make it. New plays are gone over, changes in assignments are made and questions on play in the previous week's game are answered.

The coaching staff also works with the freshman squad, which practices on the same field with the varsity, teaching it the varsity's next opponent's basic offensive and defensive setups. The frosh squad demonstrates these setups to the varsity in a line scrimmage later in the week.

Three days of intensive preparation for the coming game begins on Tuesday. These are heavy workout days when contact and scrimmage must be done. Practices run from 4:30 to 6 p.m. on all three days.

Coaches start these sessions with concentrated teaching of individual responsibilities in the various positions. Later in the Tuesday practice they work with the entire squad teaching new plays and defensive changes. New patterns are put to the test under regular game conditions in a half hour intra-squad scrimmage on Tuesday or Wednesday. This gives players the heavy contact which Duke feels so necessary for a player to experience before the bruising competition of a Saturday game.

The Panthers get a preview of their next opponent's plays on Thursday afternoon when the freshman team runs the opposition's offensive and defensive sets. The varsity also has an opportunity to review its own offensive and defensive plays in this same scrimmage.

With the game only a day away, a light workout session in sweat suits is scheduled Friday. Kicking is stressed, rules relating to certain phases of the game are stressed and signal drill is held.

If the Panthers are on the road for either the Wesleyan or Bates game they leave after lunch on Friday. In this case the light workout is held Saturday morning at the opponent's field.

On these two long distance road trips the team holds a 20 minute meeting at the hotel to receive copies of the scouting report and view last year's game with the opponents. A projector and room at the hotel are available for additional viewing of these films by individual players.

For all other games the team meets 7:30 p.m. Friday in the Field House for the scouting report, movies and an explanation of final game details by the head coach. The one and one-quarter hour session is the only night asked of squad members during the week.

On the day of the game the Middlebury squad attends classes until 10 a.m. and then eats a hearty pre-game training meal at Proctor Hall dining room. Players report to the trainer for taping of ankles and other joints during the remainder of the morning.

Players dress at the Field House in game uniforms more than an hour before the game. Minutes later they leave for the Porter Field locker room and rest there until the pre-game workout. The team captain directs all pre-game conditioning.

Duke calls the team together for last minute instructions which usually include the first play of the game and sometimes the first series of downs for the quarterback. The Panther coach doesn't go in for the flashy oratory which was commonplace in the early days of football, but tries to keep his talk as short as Nelsonese will allow.

"The players work themselves up to a pitch," Duke explained. "They know what they are supposed to do and that it is up to them to do it. Good team captains are very essential in building team morale."

Before the team lines up for the opening kickoff, the coach and captains decide which option they will exercise if they win the toss of the coin, to kick or receive. Their decision is based on several factors such as wind, condition of the field and the type of team they are facing that day.

A head coach must make numerous decisions such as times-out, substitutions and calling plays, but Duke agrees with those who tend to leave the play in the hands of the quarterback.

This doesn't mean that Duke just sits on the sidelines and watches the game. To the contrary, he can be heard above the crowd directing a player to his proper position or reminding him of his responsibility.

"I leave the calling of plays up to the quarterback but try to help him by analyzing the defenses, and suggesting certain plays based on the observations of our spotter in the press box," Duke said. "When I do send in plays I send them for a reason—something we are working towards," he added.

The spotter, usually the coach who scouted the opponent the previous week, is the eyes of the football team, Duke said. "I depend heavily on the spotter because the bench is the worst possible spot to watch a game from," he adds.

The spotter is as important to the game as the forward observer is to an artillery battery. He calls the shots that may well determine the outcome of a contest. During the course of a game, fans will frequently see Duke with a phone in his hand. During periods when the opposition is in possession of the ball, the Panther quarterback also gets on the direct line to the spotter.

Duke doesn't waste the brief 15 minute halftime of a game on impassioned speeches. Instead he listens to his spotter and on the basis of his observations decides on any changes. New plays are outlined on the blackboard and questions are answered about problems in individual areas.

Players with bumps and bruises are treated by the team trainer and those with more serious injuries are examined closely by the doctor. Duke checks the physical condition of his team before returning to the field.

The second half of the game is much like the first for a coach. However, the strain on him increases with the approach of final gun. At the close of play Duke customarily walks along the mid-field stripe for the ritual handshake with the opposing coach.

Next day the cycle begins all over again with the pattern pretty much the same for each game. Only the intensity varies when a college engages in the traditional rivalry, a game which means more than others. Middlebury's big games are the first two weeks of November against Vermont state rivals Norwich and Vermont. The Panthers meet Norwich for the 73rd time this year in one of the longest football series in New England. The Vermont series will terminate after the game next year.

The coach's work doesn't end when the final play is run and equipment is packed away for another year, but goes on. Following the annual team banquet, which includes the presentation of awards and the introduction of the team captain, Duke begins thinking about next season.

Duke is a popular speaker at high school banquets and is in demand at area schools in November.

With a large part of his team graduating each year Duke is concerned with finding replacements. He must turn his attention to "recruiting"—encouraging scholar-athletes at high schools and prep schools to come to Middlebury.

This can prove to be one of the coach's toughest jobs for the competition is keen for youths who are not only good football players, but also good students. Middlebury must compete with the Ivy League, "The Little Three" of Amherst, Williams and Wesleyan and other schools with the high academic requirements of Middlebury.

In considering a candidate, Duke not only takes a look at a youth's football ability, but also what type of citizen and scholar he may be when he gets in college. Duke's philosophy is not to even consider a boy unless it appears that he can handle the work at Middlebury.

Middlebury doesn't resort to fulltime recruiters which are used in many colleges. Instead, its candidates come to Middlebury on their own or are recommended by alumni, friends, parents and high school coaches.

Anyone in the coaching profession as long as Duke—22 years at Middlebury and four seasons at R.P.I.—makes numerous contacts over the years in secondary school coaching circles. Duke draws heavily on this source and has found it his most successful means of obtaining football candidates for Middlebury.

"We start contacting, by letter, some boys in the spring of their junior year," Duke said. "We try not to bother any boy during the football season of his senior year," he added.

Duke says he enthusiastically encourages a boy who has a chance for admission and who is interested enough to want to visit the campus. An interested prospect must pay his own transportation to Middlebury, but is housed and provided meals by the College during his tour of the campus.

Duke feels the prospective student-athlete taking a look at Middlebury, considers the academic standing, athletic program, coeducational feature, recreational facilities and whether parents or friends attended Middlebury. One or more of these is likely to figure in his final decision.

With recruiting completed in the spring the coaching staff turns its attention to preparations for the next season. Unlike many colleges, Middlebury doesn't hold a formal spring practice.

Instead those interested in playing in the fall meet for a two-day informal practice of kicking, passing and signal drill. There is also a review of last season's basic plays and an introduction of new offense sets that may be tried in the fall football camp.

The session gives the coaching staff an idea of what it has and areas that must be filled by new personnel coming up from the previous year's freshman team.

Information sheets on football camp are mailed out to all members of the varsity and freshmen teams in June. Players are asked to return an enclosed card indicating whether or not they plan to attend. On the basis of these returns, invitations to attend the fall camp are sent out the end of July. Also enclosed with the invitation are a list of conditioning exercises prepared by Trainer Waterman.

Two weeks later, basic offensive and defensive information, set ups to be used, drills and other pertinent information is sent to each individual for study. This inaugurates a player's play book which contains material given him at football camp and throughout the season.

1967 LANGUAGE SCHOOLS COMMENCEMENTS

Congressman Brademas Receives Honorary Degree

Middlebury College conferred the largest number of graduate degrees in its history, 382 M.A. degrees and three Doctorates in Modern Languages, at its 1967 Language Schools Commencements. At the exercises of the Bread Loaf School of English on August 12, President Armstrong presented diplomas to 36 candidates. The commencement oration was delivered by Professor Martin Price of Yale University on the subject, "Wise Saws and Modern Instances." This was Professor Price's third summer on the Bread Loaf staff. Dean Paul Cubeta, Director of the School, announced the appointment of Dr. Frederick Cabot, assistant professor in the English Department, as Assistant Director of the Bread Loaf School of English.

The commencement exercises of the Foreign Language Schools on the campus were held in Mead Memorial Chapel on August 15. President Armstrong awarded 346 Master's diplomas, some of them in absentia to students still in Europe after completing the course at one of Middlebury's graduate schools abroad. In fact, 207 of the candidates were products of our Graduate Schools in Paris, Madrid, Mainz and Florence. Two students in the French Summer School completed all the rigorous requirements for the Doctorate in Modern Languages: Sister Mary Rosenda Gill and Mrs. Maria Demers; in the Italian Summer School, Mr. Aldo Finco.

Congressman John Brademas, Representative from Indiana, was a guest of honor at the College during the day, and gave the Commencement Address. Dr. Freeman, Director of the Language Schools, presented him for the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, as follows: "A native of Indiana, he graduated from Harvard College, magna cum laude, Phi Beta Kappa; was awarded the Rhodes Scholarship from Indiana, and in 1954 graduated from Oxford University with the Doctorate in Philosophy. After a year as executive assistant to Adlai Stevenson and a year as an assistant professor of political science, he was elected to Congress as Representative from the Third District of Indiana, and has been re-elected to his fifth term to serve in the 90th Congress. He is a member of the House Education and Labor Committee, and its General and Special Education and Special Labor subcommittees; also of the Committee on House Administration. He was the sponsor in Congress of the International Education Act of 1966, of the Teacher Fellowship and Teacher Corps Programs of 1965; and co-sponsor of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, the Higher Education Act of 1965, the Vocational Education Act of 1963 and the Peace Corps Act. He was named one of America's Ten Outstanding Young Men of 1962. He has been a delegate to many international conferences in Europe and Latin America, a member of official teams to study higher education in the Soviet Union and in Argentina, a member of the Board of Visitors to the Department of Romance Languages at Harvard University."

President Armstrong, in conferring the degree, addressed him with these words: "We salute in you the example of a man who has accepted the duty of leadership as a matter of conscience. After a brief but brilliant apprenticeship, you have found yourself representing the American people as a leader in the crucial task of raising the quality of American education at all levels and for all the people. Middlebury College honors you especially for your position that in education lies the essential solution of most of the world's problems; and that a sympathetic understanding of other countries is the only sound basis for America's leadership in a close-knit world. Well-informed head of task forces and committees on international education, eloquent sponsor of much important legislation on that subject, energetic and dedicated public servant, you represent so well the ideas of Middlebury College and its Language Schools that we are proud to call you one of our honorary alumni. By virtue of the authority vested in me, I am happy to confer upon you the degree of Doctor of Laws, honoris causa, and admit you to all the rights, honors and privileges which here and everywhere appertain to this degree."

The text of Dr. Brademas' address, somewhat abbreviated, follows:

Language Schools

Commencement Address

CONGRESSMAN JOHN BRADEMAS

AS A FORMER TEACHER and member of the House Education and Labor Committee, I am aware of the great contribution that Middlebury has made in this field over the years, especially in the preparation of outstanding language teachers and scholars. For over a century Middlebury has shown the way—for your Foreign Language Schools are by far the largest of the specialized, intensive language schools in this country—and your schools remain the leader and model for the NDEA language institutes and similar ventures across the nation.

Others now share the language studies credo to which Middlebury has held so tenaciously for five decades—in the words of the distinguished director of your school, Dr. Stephen A. Freeman:

> The ultimate goal of a complex understanding of the literature, culture and mind of a country can be attained only through an adequate control of the oral and written forms of expression of the language; . . . that much great literature is essentially oral; and that it is also clearly in the national interest that many Americans be able to communicate orally with their neighbors in a small world . . .

Now Americans in 1967 are in some ways born in the most enlightened age in the history of mankind.

Yet our colleges and universities are today graduating too many students who believe the world is flat and the sun turns around the earth—at least in terms of their knowledge of other countries of the world. Indeed, we may soon know more about the surface of the moon than we do about the problems of the vast majority of the people of this planet who are not Americans.

Only 15 years ago American higher education was almost totally confined to the culture of Western Europe and it was difficult to find books and teaching materials for international studies, especially of the non-Western nations.

Only a handful of universities gave courses on Asia or the Middle East that stressed the contemporary world; still fewer offered courses on Africa.

And the situation has not greatly improved in recent years. In 1963 only 10% of the enrolled undergraduates in the country were taking courses with an international dimension.

Fewer than two dozen of our 1,500 universities and four-year colleges require that undergraduates take even a single course dealing primarily with non-Western cultures.

Of 191 state colleges and universities, a 1966 survey showed that only 50% offered a single course in non-Western studies.

In my own home state of Indiana, at four universities enrolling the largest number of future teachers in the state, only 1 or 2 percent study a foreign language for even two years.

In announcing a series of grants for international studies, the Ford Foundation recently warned that only five American Ph.D.s relating to the Chinese language have been produced in the last 10 years!

I could continue to recite examples of the glaring gaps in the capacity and commitment of our colleges and universities in international studies and research.

I hasten to point out that in the past decade there have been some significant efforts to remedy the imbalance, mostly by the private foundations and a few colleges and universities. The Federal government has also taken a part in supporting international studies, notably through Title VI of the National Defense Education Act which has served to expand modern language and area studies in universities around the country.

I might here take note of the important and perceptive study that Dr. Freeman prepared two years ago evaluating the Title VI Modern Language Fellowship Program. Dr. Freeman made a strong appeal for expanding our horizons in world affairs education.

You at Middlebury have certainly responded to the need for developing international studies through your widely known foreign language programs and through encouraging graduate study abroad. I would cite in particular the addition last year of the Summer Language School in Chinese as a sign of Middlebury's continuing advancement and leadership in this field.

But we have a very long way to go in developing the international dimensions of American higher education. It is to correct the past imbalance and strengthen the kind of effort being made by Middlebury College that Congress last year passed and President Johnson signed into law on the steps of Chulalongkorn University in Bangkok the International Education Act of 1966.

The International Education Act is linked directly with my thesis—namely, that the new American university must find better ways of educating young Americans about the world in which we live.

The Act authorizes a domestic program of $140 million in grants over the next three years for graduate courses of research and training in international affairs and for undergraduate programs. The Act also provides for NDEA Institutes for the training of secondary school teachers of international affairs.

The International Education Act represents the first time that the Federal government has made a long range commitment to supporting the international dimensions of our colleges and universities as educational institutions, not merely as resources for the overseas operations of the government.

Let me make particularly clear that the International Education Act is not aimed at making our colleges and universities instruments of United States foreign policy.

One of the traditional glories of American universities has been their freedom from subservience to government, for in the eloquent words of your distinguished President, Dr. Armstrong, "the truth finally needs no shield; it does need a home among men."

The International Education Act and its legislative history contain strong prohibitions against government interference with the scholarly programs it supports.

Indeed, the Act serves as a strong barrier to possible encroachments on the academic freedoms of open inquiry, debate and publication. Congress insisted that the International Education Act be administered by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare—the Cabinet Department with primary responsibility for education. Congress did not assign responsibility for administration of the Act to the Department of State, the Department of Defense and certainly not the CIA!

President Johnson has also declared that he will establish a new Center for Educational Cooperation in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to administer programs authorized by the International Education Act and to serve as a focal point of leadership in international education generally.

The establishment of the center has been hampered, however, by the failure of the Appropriations Committees in Congress to vote the million dollars originally authorized to establish it and a National Advisory Committee on International Studies. In fact, it is most unlikely that any significant amount of money will be made available for the International Education Act this fiscal year. I hope that at least some funds, even if modest, will be approved for planning purposes.

The great promise of the International Education Act therefore remains to be fulfilled, for without funds of course this milestone legislation is but an empty shell. The Congress has yet to make good on the broad national commitment expressed in the Act to strengthen American education in world affairs . . .

We can offer explanations of our failure adequately to support international studies in our colleges and universities, but we can no longer justify it.

For as a nation we can no longer afford complacency about the state of international education in our universities. We face a new world where international events, more directly and more rapidly than ever before, affect the lives of millions of Americans. We live in a time when American business is deeply involved in rapid expansion throughout the world and when our citizens have unprecedented opportunities for travel and service abroad.

We live, moreover, in a revolutionary international setting where the centers of conflict have shifted largely to non-Western areas, where population explosion and the shortage of food pose a threat to human life—where the pace of change in the underdeveloped lands brings challenges and opportunities to which we must respond with understanding and flexibility.

In this new world we need a new dimension in our system of education—one that will give students a knowledge and understanding of the complexities of the lands and peoples beyond our own borders.

It is no longer enough—if indeed it ever was—to offer students only a few isolated courses related to foreign countries in the Western world. A truly international dimension must be central—not peripheral—to an education in the twentieth century. We must make a particular effort to expose all American students to the rich variety of peoples and cultures in the non-Western world.

Building international curricula of first-class quality into our institutions of higher education is not going to be a simple task. It will require long and careful planning and a major allocation of resources. But I have been greatly encouraged by the enthusiastic response of colleges and universities to the possibilities of the International Education Act. Institutions of all sizes in every part of the nation have expressed active interest in developing projects under the Act and many have proceeded with preliminary plans in the faith that money for the program will soon be appropriated by Congress.

Even without initial funds the International Education Act is beginning to accomplish its objectives simply by sparking a new concern and interest in expanding world affairs education. Many colleges have appointed deans and directors of international programs, and some have joined in cooperative arrangements to pool resources in the international education field. . . .

Let me take this opportunity to urge that Middlebury College continue to demonstrate vigorous leadership in international education. Here at Middlebury you have been pioneers in language studies but you, too, can do more, hopefully in time drawing on the resources of the International Education Act.

Even without such help, however, I want to suggest that Middlebury can move ahead; indeed, all institutions of higher education in America must become more effective in learning and teaching about the problems and the peoples of the rest of this troubled planet.

Fourteen words from the lines of the distinguished poet Marianne Moore tell us the kind of world we live in:

What is our innocence?
What is our guilt? All are naked, none is safe.

In such a world, then, and in such a time, we need a new college, a new university, a new education—one that will give students a knowledge, an understanding of that world.

Language Schools Honor Dr. Neuse and Dr. Fayer

Two of Middlebury's senior professors, who had given several decades of distinguished leadership to two of the College's Summer Language Schools, retired as Directors at the close of the Summer Session of 1967. Professor Werner Neuse, who retired from the College faculty as Professor Emeritus of German in June 1966 (see Summer Issue 1966), had consented to continue for two summers as Director of the German School. Bringing a very successful session to a close, a Festival was held in his honor on Sunday afternoon, August 13. Exercises were held in Mead Chapel, at which Dr. Stephen A. Freeman, Director of the Language Schools, and Dr. Gerhard Storz, formerly Kultusminister, and now Professor at the University of Tübingen, read tributes to Dr. Neuse. Music by Bach was played by an instrumental quartet, and sung by the German School Choir. The feature of the exercises was the presentation to Dr. Neuse by Professor Fritz Tiller, Assistant to the Director of the German School, of a "Festschrift" or volume of essays in honor of Dr. Neuse. The volume was edited by Professors Herbert Lederer and Joachim Seyppel, colleagues of Dr. Neuse and members of the German School faculty. The fifteen essays which comprise the volume are written by colleagues of Dr. Neuse, some on literary subjects; two concern Dr. Neuse himself and his brilliant career. A reception in Proctor Hall Lounge followed the exercises.

Professor Mischa Fayer was likewise honored at exercises on Sunday evening, August 13, marking his retirement as the Founder-Director of the Russian Summer School. Dr. Fayer, who became Professor Emeritus of Russian in June (see Summer Issue 1967), continued through the summer as the Director of the School which he founded in 1945. At a faculty gathering in Stewart Hall, Dr. Fayer was presented with an engraved silver deskstand by his colleagues. The closing exercises of the Russian School were then held in Proctor Hall Lounge. The graduating class presented him with a scroll making him a permanent member of the class of 1967. The alumni organization of the Russian School then presented an engrossed parchment naming him permanent honorary president of the Russian Alumni. A reception followed in Stewart Hall Lounge, attended by all members of the Russian School. Dr. Fayer has accepted the position of chairman of the Russian Department at the University of Kentucky for the coming year.

The tribute to Dr. Werner Neuse, read by Dr. Freeman at the Festprogramm, follows:

A Tribute to

Dr. Werner Neuse

Dr. Werner Neuse

Werner Neuse has been associated with the Middlebury College German Summer School for thirty-seven summers, all but three of its total existence, and all of its consecutive existence—two summers as a member of its faculty, sixteen summers as its Dean or Assistant Director and nineteen summers as its Director. In all truth, the present splendid success of the German School is his work, and the finest tribute to his leadership.

The German Summer School had been in 1915 the first of the Middlebury Summer Language Schools to create the concept of a segregated, specialized and intensive school where students are pledged to use only the foreign language, in class and out of class, at work and play, "in an atmosphere as distinctly German as if they were traveling in Germany." The idea was demonstrated to be successful, but the First World War cut short the life of the German School in 1917 after three summers.

In 1931, its time for rebirth had come, and the German School was reopened, by the initiative of President Paul D. Moody and Professor Everett Skillings. Professor Ernst Feise of Johns Hopkins University was appointed Director, and the School was located in the village of Bristol, some twelve miles from Middlebury. One of the instructors that first summer was a young man who had completed his Doctorate in Philosophy at the University of Giessen the year before, meanwhile teaching at the University of Wisconsin for two years and at New York University for a year. Werner Neuse so impressed the authorities of Middlebury by his ability, that when Professor Skillings resigned from the summer session in 1932, he was named Assistant Director or Dean of the German Summer School, as well as Associate Professor and Acting Chairman of the German Department during the academic year.

It was a challenging appointment. It was the Dean's task each summer to transform the Bristol Inn into a German campus, the local graded school into German classrooms, the Gymnasium into a well-stocked German library, and two score village houses into the German dormitories. Initial fears and suspicions of the villagers had to be overcome by tact and diplomacy. The students had to be coached into making themselves accepted and welcomed into a tight Vermont community without at the same time sacrificing their concentration on the German language. Dr. Neuse proved to be the ideal aid for Dr. Feise, each complementing the other in all the qualities necessary for a perfect team. The financial depression of the Thirties created difficulties; then far more serious were the problems occasioned by the Second World War. The enrollment dropped in 1942 to thirty-one students. But the storm was weathered through the careful management of the Feise-Neuse team; and with the returning soldiers the enrollment rose again rapidly.

Important changes were imminent. Ernst Feise retired in 1948, and Werner Neuse was judged worthy to shoulder the whole task alone. As Director now, he performed a double duty, not only creating the academic curriculum and faculty, but selecting the students, keeping the records, and supervising all the material and financial operation of the School. By 1951, the School was manifestly outgrowing the village of Bristol. New facilities had become available on the Middlebury campus. The decision was therefore made to move back to Middlebury, returning to Pearsons Hall where Professor Stroebe had founded it, now 52 years ago. The change was not easy, as many a feature and tradition of the Bristol location had to be dropped or replaced. The advantages were greater, however, in the close-knit dormitory arrangements, ample classrooms, superior library and laboratory facilities, and an opportunity to share in the dramatic, musical and entertainment programs of the entire summer session.

Under Dr. Neuse's energetic direction, balancing imaginative enterprise with wise caution, the German School grew healthily during the nineteen-fifties, overcoming the set-backs of the two wars, and meeting the increasing (Please turn to page 56)

The tribute to Dr. Mischa Fayer, read by Dr. Freeman at the closing exercises of the Russian School follows:

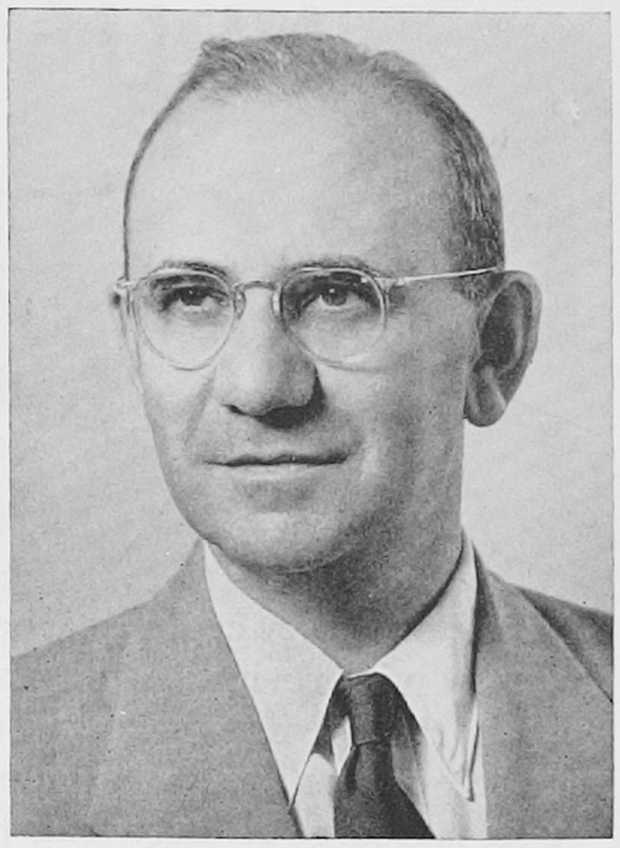
Dr. Mischa Fayer



Dr. Mischa Fayer

We are met here in these closing exercises of the Middlebury College Russian Summer School primarily to do honor to Dr. Mischa Harry Fayer, who retires as Director of the School which he founded in 1945, and which he has led with success and distinction for twenty-three years. We gather to pay tribute to his splendid accomplishment, to congratulate him, and to thank him officially and personally for his outstanding contributions to Middlebury College, and to Russian studies in this country.

Dr. Fayer was peculiarly fitted to undertake this task. Born in this country, but returning to Russia with his parents at an early age, he completed his secondary education there, graduating cum laude from a Gymnasium in Bessarabia. He then came back to the United States, and earned his Bachelor's and Master's degrees at the University of Minnesota. He studied at the Sorbonne, became fluent in French, earned a certificat in the Faculté des Lettres, and did research in the Bibliothèque Nationale. After further graduate work in American universities, he completed his Doctorate in Philosophy at Columbia University with a brilliant thesis on "Gide, Freedom, and Dostoievsky." Dr. Fayer is therefore bilingual and nearly tri-lingual, thoroughly familiar with the educational systems of Russia, the United States, and France, at home in the cultures of three countries. He has maintained these contacts by frequent visits to Russia and elsewhere in Europe. He has published a significant and successful series of Russian textbooks. He is thus unusually fitted to direct the Middlebury Russian School, and to interpret one culture to another.

Middlebury College had the good fortune to lure him away from Michigan State University in 1943 to head the winter session work in Russian. Discussions began immediately about the creation of a Russian Summer School. Encouraged by President Samuel S. Stratton, and in spite of the problems and dislocations of the war years, Dr. Fayer laid careful and diligent plans. The School opened in 1945, with 32 students and a faculty of four, housed in three fraternity houses. Dr. Fayer's prophetic statement in the March 1945 bulletin has been fully justified, and has constituted his continuing program. He wrote then that Russia "will play a leading role in the post-war world," and that "not only will there be an urgent practical demand for Americans trained in the Russian language, but also that effective and permanent cooperation between the two nations in peace will depend in large measure upon the existence in the United States of many centers for the serious study of Russian civilization, literature and culture, as well as her social, economic and political organization."

The need was indeed great and urgent; and under Dr. Fayer's dedicated leadership, the Russian School grew healthily. The next year saw an enrollment of 51 (all advanced students); 1947 brought 76 students, a large percentage of them men, and a faculty of nine. During the next decade, the enrollment averaged well over 80; and many distinguished teachers were recruited for the faculty by the Director's untiring efforts.

In 1958, Dr. Fayer's persistent vision of the aims of the School bore fruit in the creation of the Institute of Soviet Studies, giving realization to the second part of his complete objective, the teaching of Russian social, economic and political affairs. He was able to convince the Rockefeller Foundation of the importance of this idea and received a supporting grant for three years, which was later renewed for three more years. He has thus made Middlebury unique in still another way, for nowhere in this country to my knowledge is there a school where graduate students may study scientific Russian, foreign policy, economics, geography, Soviet administration and the press, in courses taught exclusively in Russian by outstanding native authorities. Dr. Fayer's vision is thus serving America in a very special way.

Enrollments immediately responded to this new opportunity, 29 in the Institute of Soviet Studies in the first summer; and a total of 124 in both schools, still with twice as many men as women. The total figure rose to 144 in 1960. If enrollments have declined slightly since that time, it is chiefly because of the competition of federally-supported institutes and fellowships created by (Please turn to page 57)

GEORGE H. BOSTWICK, JR., '58

By Lincoln A. Werden

Often on snowy evenings when Duke Nelson or Joe Presbrey were reviewing the results of the day during a Middlebury winter carnival, they would invariably ask the question: "How is Pete?"

Pete is George H. Bostwick, Jr., athlete-sportsman-gentleman of the Long Island Bostwicks. And even though winter get-togethers no longer include Nelson and Presbrey and a certain sports reporter, a warm interest in the affairs and achievements of Pete remain.

He is, of course, the trim athlete who plays tennis, golf, court tennis, ice hockey, squash racquets and racquets—depending on the season. He not only plays them well, but has an inbred elan that attracts spectator interest.

More than a year ago it was my pleasure to write something of Pete from a golfing viewpoint. Since then this 33-year-old, father of four, has continued his pattern of being a sportsman for all seasons. He plunges into each sport with such enthusiasm, that it's difficult to know if any one commands more of himself than another. On the golf trail he is among those adhering to an individual putting technique. It's his own version of the croquet style that has become something of a controversial subject during recent months. It's not that Pete is a rebel or a controversial person, but he experiments. If he finds that a change of style on the putting green will help his game, he adopts it.

Pete has had the distinction of being a contestant in the national championships of five sports—golf, tennis, squash racquets, court tennis and racquets. When the snow comes tumbling down in New York, as it does in Middlebury, Pete will often be enroute in the evening from his Wall Street office to Princeton, N. J. or to the Beaver Dam Skating Club of Locust Valley, N. Y. where he assembles a group of ice hockey buffs who have been at business all day.

Club, oldest organization of its kind in America. Pete is both captain and president and justifiably proud of these enthusiasts who are even ready to be shock troops in a ten game schedule against varsity squads of Harvard, Yale, Brown, Princeton and Army. Mostly ex-college players themselves, they thrive with the opportunity for action again.

By February, however, Pete is usually hitting his stride in court games. He says "sometimes hockey tends to take the spring out" of his legs for court tennis. Actually though he notes "shifting from one sport to another is just a matter of being rusty in the other." He practices and keeps at it, no matter whether it's summertime on a golf course or indoors in a racquets court.

Pete's success at court tennis has resulted in victories for him in both the national open and amateur championships. Court tennis is a complex game not often seen by many, because there are only a handful of courts on which it is played. It was the game of French and English kings, and it is fascinating to watch, once you solve the fundamental intricacies of the scoring. Pete's brother Jimmy is also an expert in the game and Jimmy also won the French amateur golf championship three years ago.

Pete's dad is George H. Bostwick, Sr., one of the nation's great polo players. He was also among the top amateur steeplechase riders in the world, when he was competing, and was a member of six national open polo championship teams. Bostwick Field for many years was a rendezvous for polo enthusiasts on Long Island.

THE TREASURER'S REPORT

by CARROLL RIKERT, JR.
Treasurer of Middlebury College

Carroll Rikert, Jr.

AN ARTICLE in the September 18th issue of U. S. News and World Report contained a picture of Phase I of the new Science Center now under construction on the Middlebury College Campus. The article was entitled "The Coming Crisis in Private Colleges." The crisis to which it speaks is financial. The growing gap between steadily mounting costs and available income presents a dilemma to the private college which in the publicly supported institution is considerably abated by access to municipal and state appropriations.

While the article did not identify Middlebury with the picture nor single us out for mention in its text, there is no reason to believe Middlebury is immune to the forces at work which make the financial problems potentially of crisis dimension. As we look at the financial results of the fiscal year just ended, we shall wish to do so in this light.

TO TAKE a note of optimism at the outset, we can say that if indeed a period of crisis does lie ahead, we do not go into it already over-extended. The balance sheets accompanying this report give ample evidence of careful stewardship of resources. Increasing outlays for plant expansion and annual operation have not been at the expense of fund balances or regular provisions to reserves, which altogether show continued growth in the year just ended. For over a quarter of a century the College has operated on a balanced budget. The accompanying statements of Expenses and Appropriations and of Resources Used for the year ended June 30th are again balanced. At the same time we see in them evidences of the trends which give rise to concerns for the future. Last year we surpassed $5,000,000 in the operating budget for the first time; this year the total went above $6,000,000. Over $200,000 of this expenditure was made possible by increases in student fees. For the year ended June 30, 1966, tuition stood at $1,500; for the year just ended, it was $1,700; for the current year it is $1,900. We, in company with other institutions of our type, with which our fees remain comparable, must view this trend with concern, constantly seeking other sources of revenue to finance our growing needs.

Beyond increases in student fees, and the gradual increment in endowment income which steady growth in endowment funds will produce, the College for marked increases in funds needed to balance the budget must look to Annual Giving. In the budget of the year just ended, $150,000 from this source was availed of (to replace a like amount included the previous year in Other Gifts and Grants representing the final instalment of the initial Ford Foundation matching grant payment, which was non-recurring). The remainder of the $176,735.87 Annual Giving total shown in the accompanying impressive listing of Gifts, Grants, and Bequests as coming through Annual Giving enabled the College to make a start on matching the generous gift of $250,000 from the Charles A. Dana Foundation to establish The Charles A. Dana Supported Professorship Program. The College has until 1969 to meet this matching challenge of the Dana Foundation. Both in this challenge and in the goal of $200,000 set for Annual Giving in the current fiscal year the response will be of critical importance as we face a future in which the omen of crisis is discernible.

The College in its accounting and reporting, in conformity with generally accepted practice for educational institutions, follows fund accounting procedures in order that all funds may be accounted for in accordance with their designated purposes. Hence the division of the balance sheets into four self-balancing groupings: (1) current, (2) student loans, (3) endowment, and (4) plant funds.

Current funds assets, liabilities, and funds relate to the annual ongoing educational program of the College and to the operation of its auxiliary enterprises. A differentiation is made between General and Restricted to identify funds which are received and expended subject to a commitment of one sort or another to the donors. The current restricted funds are made up of unexpended endowment income and gifts and accumulations for designated purposes. The latter include the balance of gifts made to the Challenge Fund without specific designation which are awaiting allocation by action of the Board of Trustees to the several major Challenge Fund objectives which were not met by specifically designated subscriptions.

Unexpended income balances of restricted endowment funds are in effect held in trust until expended in accordance with restrictions set by the donors. Each separately invested endowment fund is credited with the actual income of the investments it holds. By far the largest portion of the endowment funds is pooled for investment purposes in the Associated Trust Funds. Distribution of Associated Trust Funds income is made to participating funds at a rate per income share determined each year by the Finance Committee. For the year ended June 30, 1967 it was $6.00 per share. Any amount by which this distribution exceeds or falls short of actual investment earnings is taken from or added to the endowment income stabilization reserve. For the year just ended there was a net addition of $72,137.48 to this reserve.

STUDENT LOAN FUNDS represent the funds available to the College for low interest-bearing loans to its students. Such loans constitute an increasingly significant part of the College's enlarging program of financial aid to students. $88,407.66 of the $91,705.19 by which loan funds increased during the past year is in the National Defense Student Loan Fund.

The growth of over a million dollars in endowment and other non-expendable funds during the year came principally through gifts and bequests. THE NEWS LETTER through its feature "By Will To The College On The Hill" has reported regularly on the significance of bequests in this splendid achievement. Special mention should be made here also of the opportunity for deferred giving through gifts subject to reservation of life income, which again contributed significantly to the growth of endowment funds during the year.

Part of the growth of endowment reflects also the efforts of the Trustee Committee on Finance, under whose direction the funds are invested. The investments of Endowment funds at June 30, 1967, excluding funds held in trust by others, were 44% in common stocks, 43% in bonds and notes, and 13% in other securities or forms of investment. These percentages are based on the June 30th market or estimated values of the investments, and compare with 50%, 40%, and 10%, respectively, at the end of the previous year. Associated Trust Fund earnings during the year represented a return of 4.64% on investments at book value and 4.08% at market or estimated values at June 30, 1967.

The increase during the year in plant funds of land, buildings, and improvements reflects principally the substantial beginning made during the year on construction of Phase I of the Science Center and on the Christian A. Johnson Memorial Building, the new Music-Art Center. The splendid addition to our plant of the Faculty House at 3 College Street and the Deanery at 5 College Street, both through the generosity of an anonymous donor, is also reflected in these figures. was negotiated during the year to assist in the financing of this first phase of the Science Center. Unexpended plant funds at June 30th were comprised of $98,387.33 reserved for retirement of bonded indebtedness, $302,320.42 reserved for plant replacement, and $1,364,444.15 available for building projects to which the College is now committed, or for its future physical facilities needs. Again this year provision was made for these needs by the acquisition of property contiguous to the Campus, financed in part by the reduction in unrestricted gifts and accumulations in 1966–67 evident from the current funds and liabilities section of the balance sheets and by appropriations to plant funds shown in the statement of expense and appropriations.

Expenses and appropriations in all categories except the one just mentioned (and except for Challenge Fund expense, which fell off almost to nothing with the very successful windup of the Campaign) increased significantly in the year ended June 30, 1967. Again, as in the preceding year, the largest increases were in instructional salaries and in other costs of instruction and research. With the increase in tuition, student aid expenditures were also increased. All categories of expense reflect the costs of additional personnel and the impact of rising costs of all sorts, concretely indicative of the trend mentioned above.

Our new Science Center, albeit selected purely through happenstance by the editor of "U. S. News and World Report," is an apt example of both the problem and the promise the future holds for Middlebury. Its 75,000 square feet compare with approximately 25,000 which will be vacated by the departments which will move into the new building when completed next year. We take on with its completion a considerable additional heat and maintenance load and annual debt service of $85,000, to say nothing of additional personnel at all levels. But what a significant enlargement of the role for the liberal sciences this represents on a campus which saw its last new science facility completed in 1912! Future financial statements, like those accompanying this report, will show the impact of our rising aspirations on the budget and the balance sheets. In the generous response from Alumni, Corporations, Foundations, and Friends reflected in the listing of gifts and bequests for the year just ended we take confidence that these aspirations for Middlebury's future are widely shared.

Any readers who would like to receive a copy of the audited statements soon to be published, from which the accompanying financial statements have been condensed, may secure one when it is available by addressing a request to the Editor of The News Letter. Attention is also invited to the article entitled "Private Colleges—A Question of Survival" in the October issue of Fortune.

ALUMNI SONS AND DAUGHTERS of the Class of 1971

An annual feature of The News Letter is a pictorial presentation of new students who have a Middlebury mother, Middlebury dad, or both. This year there are thirty-one members of the Class of 1971 who have Middlebury parents. In addition, there are thirty-three other freshmen with Middlebury relatives.

These sixty-four new students are among the 394 men and women admitted this fall from a total 2,898 applications considered by the Director of Admissions. They came from thirty-six states and ten foreign countries.

Calvin Hulbert, sixth president, and Stuart Vail McDonald, great-great-grandson of Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, Middlebury's seventh president.*

When President Hulbert assumed office in 1875, the College's enrollment was 53 young men (women were not admitted until 1883). Today 1,411 men and women are enrolled. During the administration of Presidents Hulbert and Hamlin expenses for the year were between $200 and $235. This included tuition ($45), room rent ($11.25), fees for use of library and care of room ($10), fuel, lights and washing ($25), and board, about $140.

VOLUME IV NUMBER 1 • DAVID J. LITTLEFIELD, EDITOR

Belles-Lettres: Personages-Epistles-Poems

The Letters of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Edited by Andrew Hilen, Volumes 1–2, Harvard University Press, 1966, $25.00.

The Belknap Press has recently issued two volumes of what promises to be an elegant and expensive edition of Longfellow's letters. The editor, Mr. Hilen, a professor at the University of Washington, has carefully brought together more than eight hundred that he wrote to family, friends, colleagues, and publishers from 1814, when he was a seven-year-old at the Portland Academy, until 1843, when he had established an international reputation as a poet and student of modern languages.

Surprisingly and somewhat disappointingly, Longfellow's letters do not reflect the triumphs, the shocks, and the tragedies of his early, meteoric career. In his role of epistolary correspondent, Longfellow never quite relinquished his down-East taciturnity and self-control. He published his first volume of poems in 1826, and by 1843 he had brought out two prose works and two additional collections of poems. He had travelled thrice to Europe: he spoke French, Spanish, Italian and German fluently, and he could get by in Portuguese, Swedish, Danish and Dutch. In 1836 he succeeded George Ticknor as Smith Professor of Modern Languages at Harvard. Two younger sisters died in 1829 and in 1834, a brother-in-law, friend and Bowdoin classmate in 1835. Worst of all his wife Mary died in the same year of complications following a miscarriage in Rotterdam. This last and greatest tragedy in his life further stiffened his stoical backbone. He confessed to a friend, "I had little thought, that death could be so stripped of all its terrors," to his father that "the sense of my bereavement is deep and unutterable," and finally to his dead wife's sister: "The world considers grief unmanly, and is suspicious of that sorrow.—Hence we strive to be gay and to put a cheerful courage on, when our souls are very sad."

A sort of stoicism, a striving after optimistic affirmation, characterizes several of Longfellow's earlier poems. The robust masculine voice of "A Psalm of Life" (Life is real! Life is earnest!/And the grave is not its goal;) or of "The Village Black-Smith" and "Excelsior" may strike our ears as banal and unsubtle, but it is refreshing when compared to the then highly popular effusions of Letitia Elizabeth Landon and Felicia Hemans:

> Leaves have their time to fall,
> And flowers to wither at the north-wind's breath,
> And stars to set—but all,
> Thou hast all seasons for thine own, oh! Death.

A list of titles from Mrs. Hemans' prolific pen suggests that her audience delighted in lugubrious sentimentality. Examples are "The Graves of a Household," "The Last Wish," "Christ's Agony in the Garden," "The Departed," "The Ruin," "The Nightingale's Death-Song," and my favorite, "Evening Prayer at a Girls' School." We may dislike Longfellow's vigor, but we can at least welcome the change he wrought upon the voice of popular verse in the eighteen-thirties.

Because he was so self-contained, Longfellow has little to say to those who seek glimpses of poetic birth-pangs or hints of creative activity. We become conscious instead of the gradual replacement of forced wit and youthful gaiety by a relaxed mature self-assurance. Typical of the later voice is a friendly note he wrote to Poe, then an obscure, struggling editor, though he heard that Poe had unfavorably reviewed his poetry: "all that I have read from your pen has inspired me with a high idea of your power; and I think you are destined to stand among the first romance-writers of the country, if such be your aim." Here is no cry of wounded vanity, but instead the kindly notice of a fellow-writer. Even the vicissitudes of a five-year courtship of Fanny Appleton, who became his second wife, prompted only hints and veiled allusions in letters to his friends. More revealing of his actual state is the fact that his health broke, and that he had to take the wassercur on the Rhine. But by the end of 1843, when Mr. Hilen's second volume leaves us, Longfellow had won Fanny's hand and settled at Craigie House to live out his most famous and fruitful years.

Longfellow's letters will probably prove most valuable to historians of ideas and of belles-lettres; his friends and correspondents were some of the most interesting people of a richly intellectual time. They include Hawthorne, who had been a Bowdoin classmate; Charles Sumner, at the time a young Boston lawyer, and later Senator, martyr for the abolitionists, and implacable foe of the moderate reconstructionists; and Samuel Gridley Howe and his wife Julia Ward, co-editors of The Commonwealth, an anti-slavery periodical. Howe championed many humanitarian causes, ranging from the same Greek revolution in which Lord Byron died, to the founding of the Perkins Institute for the Blind. His wife is best known for changing a slightly vulgar marching song into America's most stirring hymn. Her brother, Samuel Ward, Jr., a flamboyant New Yorker and Longfellow's "most amiable and beloved Sam" became "King of the Lobby" in Washington, and made a fortune in influence peddling.

If those who cherish a warm spot for Longfellow's poems cannot gain a clearer appreciation of the poet from this attractive edition, nevertheless they can discover, with those who dislike his poems, that the author of the letters was a self-contained but witty and generous man.

Булат Окуджава, Будь здоров школяр, Стихи, Издательство Посев, Франкфурт, 1966, $2.00

Булат Окуджава один из советских поэтов послевоенного поколения, который многим отличается от других.

Его творчество состоит из трех элементов: поэтического, музыкального, и вокального. Чтобы полностью оценить талант Окуджава, мало его только читать, надо его услышать. Он полупоет, полудекламирует свои стихи под гитару, на которой он играет. Он поет вполголоса, задумчиво, как будто забыл о присутствии других и напевает для себя. Голос у него скромный, далеко не голос певца, хотя многие его считают самым популярным певцом в Советском Союзе. Мелодии и слова его песен-стихов просты.

Поэт Евгений Евтушенко в своей «Автобиографии» в 1957-ом году написал об Окуджава следующее: «Поэт Булат Окуджава редактировал в издательстве скучные рукописи. По вечерам за стопкой водки он пел под гитару двум-трем друзьям свои неповторимые стихи, не подозревая, что через несколько лет их будут переписывать на множество магнитофонных пленок».

Американец не может отдавать себе полного отчета в значении такого поэта как Окуджава. В Советском Союзе ходят на его выступления как в Америке молодежь ходит на выступления Боба Диллона или Битлсов. Песни-стихи Одуджава любимы, их поют везде на работе и на досуге, выражая ими свое душевное настроение. На открытые музыкальные выступления Окуджава почти невозможно достать билетов, и на вечеринках молодежи всегда бывают магнитофонные записи его песен.

Секрет Окуджава заключается не только в его поэтическом таланте но и в удивительной способности поэта выражать в своем личном творчестве настроения, стремления и ожидания народа. Некоторые критики считают его «современным Баяном», поэтом-певцом древних времен, которого упоминают в «Слове о полку Игореве» и в «Задонщине». Художественные средства, которыми он пользуется подтверждают эту мысль: близость к народной песне, иносказание, метафоры и родство с устной поэзией. Надо только читать такие стихотворения как «Один солдат на свете жил» или «Чорный кот», чтобы убедиться в том, что Окуджава ведет таинственный разговор со своими читателями-слушателями. Без риска поставить себя в неловкое положение партийная цензура не может прямо обвинить поэта. Все же, советская пресса часто нападает на музыкальные вечера Окуджава, обвиняя его в мелкотемье и в мещанских вкусах.

Булат Окуджава родился в 1924-ом году в Москве. В 1942-ом году, он добровольно поступил на военную службу. Он принимал участие в боях и был ранен. В 1950-ом году, он окончил Тбилиский государственный университет и стал работать учителем в одной из сельских школ Калужской области. В настоящее время, он живет и работает в Москве.

Первую часть этой книги занимает повесть «Будь здоров школяр», которая была напечатана в альманахе «Тарусские страницы» (1961). Очень быстро после своего выхода, этот альманах был изъят из продажи. Эта повесть посвящена теме Второй мировой войны, и во многом автобиографична. Ее главный герой еще учится в десятилетке, потом комсомольские агитаторы его уговаривают уйти добровольцем на фронт, и в конце, он возвращается раненым. Вся повесть обличает фальшивую славу и ложный обман в войне. Читатель видит войну с точки зрения семнадцатилетнего мальчика, который не всегда знает как вести себя как опытный боец, и часто бывает неуверенным в себе.

В поэтическом творчестве есть два разных корня происхождения: собственнено поэтический и песенно-поэтический. Песенно-поэтический подход можно заметить в стихотворении как «По Смоленской дороге леса, леса, леса». Другие как «Мой карандашный портрет» и «Сверчки» звучат исключительно как чисто поэтические стихи.

Тематика поэтического творчества Окуджава разнообразна но первое место занимает Вторая мировая война. Он чаще всего описывает как война действует на людей и как она калечит их, умственно и физически. Он пишет о горе солдат, которые возвращаются домой не в силах замечать, что в их доме «пахнет воровством» («О войне»), и о гибели таких прекрасных людей, как Ленька Королев («Ленька Королев»).

Вместе с трагическим входит сатирический элемент. В стихотворении «Песенка американского солдата», он пишет о том, как солдат может потерять чувство ответственности и совести: А если что не так — не наше дело.

Как говорится — «Родина велела!»
Как славно быть ни в чем не виноватым,
Совсем простым солдатом, солдатом.

Судя по сведениям из Советского Союза, это стихотворение имело другое название, которое Окуджава был принужден переименовать «Песенкой американского солдата». Все-таки, эта песенка может относиться к любой войне и к любой армии.

Часто встречаются в его песнях-стихах призыв к человеческой солидарности, основанной на любви, на дружбе и на товариществе. По мнению Окуджава, только в ней спасение людей. Самый лучший пример такой дружбы нам дает поэт в стихотворении «Ночной троллейбус».

Все стихотворения Окуджава выражают глубокую любовь и уважение к человеку. Он жалеет человека, выносящего тяжелые переживания, и сочувствует его страданиям. Ясно, что поэт горюет о душевном разрушении человека, которое часто происходит от войны, о том, что приходится перестроить не только страну, но и человека. Вопреки горю поэта, чувствуется вера в доброту человечества, и в победу над тем, что тянет людей к войне. Самая важная заслуга Окуджава заключается в том, что он умеет возобновлять нашу веру в красоту человеческой природы:

Ты красив, человек!
Это надо ж такое суметь!

Mr. Shepherd, Instuctor in Russian, takes a lively interest in contemporary Russian poetry.

The Complete Poems of D. H. Lawrence, edited by Vivian de Sola Pinto and Warren Roberts, two volumes, Viking, 1964, $15.00.

At a time when there is a dearth of careful textual presentations of major twentieth-century American and British writers, Pinto and Roberts have both practiced sound scholarship and given admirers of Lawrence access to more of his poetry than has appeared in any previous edition. Theirs will undoubtedly be the definitive edition of Lawrence's poems for a considerable length of time. To read from Rhyming Poems through Uncollected Poems offers us the possibility of seeing Lawrence's poetry clearly and as a whole, of thinking about it in developmental terms or seeing it in relation to Lawrence's novels, and finally, of recognizing its peculiar strengths as well as its weaknesses. Given the degree of historical perspective on Lawrence's art we have achieved by now, and the freedom from the violent responses that characterized both the literary criticism and the reminiscences of the thirties and forties, it is possible to define Lawrence's relation to tradition, indeed to see him as a traditionalist, and to recognize the differences between his poetry and that of other twentieth-century poets.

Lawrence's poetry is totally unlike the poetry of T. S. Eliot, for example. Eliot has been regarded as a traditionalist, but his traditionalism has its expression in the attitudes lying behind the poetry rather than in his poetic method. In a world which he vividly apprehended as disunified through the absence of any shared communal values, particularly religious values, Eliot found it necessary to create—or re-create tradition. For a vision of the world as unified and meaningful he had to look back to the world preceding the Renaissance. There he found, particularly in Dante's poetry, a model or pattern of unity which he could allude to in his own poetry in order to evoke such a world. Eliot's poetic method, on the other hand, was radical and innovating. It fused two poetic traditions: the seventeenth-century metaphysical poets' use of metaphors in which the image and its referent seem, upon a first reading, to be widely separated from one another, as in the opening lines in "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock" ("Let us go then, you and I,/When the evening is spread out against the sky/Like a patient etherised upon a table"); and the nineteenth-century French symbolist poets' use of abrupt transitions in syntax and richly elaborated symbolic patterns (as in the phantasmagoric landscape and shifting identities of the narrator in The Waste Land).

Lawrence's sensibility, unlike Eliot's, is essentially a Romantic one. In his poetry one hears echoes of Blake, Wordsworth, Keats, the early Tennyson, and Swinburne, and his use of metaphor follows the methods of the Romantic poets. It is not surprising, therefore, that the most compelling aspect of Lawrence's poetry is his ability to transform ordinary, everyday reality into something beyond itself. E. M. Forster recognized this when he spoke of Lawrence as a prophet who is "irradiating nature from within, so that every colour has a glow and every form a distinctness which could not otherwise be obtained." Consider, for example, "Gloire De Dijon."

When she rises in the morning
I linger to watch her;
She spreads the bath-cloth underneath the window
And the sunbeams catch her
Glistening white on the shoulders,
While down her sides the mellow
Golden shadow glows as
She stoops to the sponge, and her swung breasts
Sway like full-blown yellow
Gloire de Dijon roses.
She drips herself with water, and her shoulders
Glisten as silver, they crumple up
Like wet and falling roses, and I listen
For the sluicing of their rain-dishevelled petals.
In the window full of sunlight
Concentrates her golden shadow
Fold on fold, until it glows as Mellow as the glory roses.

There are only three explicit metaphors ("like full-blown yellow/Gloire de Dijon roses," "like wet and falling roses," "mellow as the glory roses") and the referent to which each points is the figure of the woman. The simplicity of method, however, belies the complexity of what has been achieved. Bath-cloth and water, shoulders and breasts, become a presence; substance becomes shadow, but paradoxically shadow is more substantial than substance (the shadow "concentrates"); man and nature become one elemental earth, air, fire, and water. Lawrence's poetic imagination is an analogizing and synthesizing one: the attributes of the woman are the attributes of the rose and those of the rose are those of the woman. It is in poems like "Gloire De Dijon," and particularly in the remarkable sequence Birds, Beasts and Flowers, that Lawrence triumphs.

But also in reading The Complete Poems one cannot avoid seeing the serious limitations of Lawrence's work when he writes in the satirical mode. It is very difficult, for example, to read with delight and/or insight the poems in Pansies and More Pansies because Lawrence's causes seem either curiously dated or the immediate expression and satisfaction of a personal quarrel. They are far too direct in their expression, and the absence of imagery within them reduces them to the level of some of the more unfortunate passages in a novel like Aaron's Rod. Lawrence is at his best when he is keeping his eye on the object he is describing, rather than reducing poetry to personal utterance. The experience of reading Lawrence's poetry is often to "see into the life of things," and there have been only a few poets who have offered us a similar intensity and awareness of perception.

Mind and Body

G. W. F. Hegel, The Phenomenology of Mind, translated, with an introduction and notes by J. B. Baillie and a special introduction by George Lichtheim, Harper Torchbooks, 1967, $4.75.

On October 13, 1806 Hegel completed the final draft of The Phenomenology of Mind. Even while he was composing the final sentences of his preface to the work he may have heard the cannons of Napoleon roaring across the city of Jena, signaling the end of an era in the life of Western civilization. In its own way this work also marked the end of an epoch in the intellectual tradition of the West, for in it Hegel attempted to initiate a broad-based intellectual movement embracing all the valid branches of human knowledge. He rejected the rationalist-mechanist approach of the eighteenth century as well as the romantic approach of his contemporaries and sought to introduce an organic system of knowledge, integrating the classical, scholastic, rationalist, romantic and all other intellectual movements.

In this effort he was recognized by his German colleagues as a creative scholar and his work was anticipated with enthusiasm. But the scope and nature of it was not known until it appeared in print. What his friends had expected was an elucidation of an area of thought, a sudden and momentary flare of genius or perhaps a synthesis of some sort. But the appearance of the Phenomenology as a masterly synthesis of all intellectual traditions from the Hellenistic period to the present was totally unexpected. To a few of his contemporaries Hegel appeared the supreme master—an Aristotle, Plato, St. Thomas, Immanuel Kant all put together. But his attempt to give order to the chaos of intellectual nit-picking (of which our own age has become the supreme example) and the pseudo-scientism of the specialists was not generally appreciated. To comprehend the cosmos in rational terms is the purpose of philosophy, but few philosophers had dared to form their perspectives in cosmological terms. The merit of Hegel is that he attempted this at all.

The intellectual comprehension of the whole universe is a difficult matter, yet that is precisely what Hegel attempted. His purpose was to trace a meaningful development of the human personality, a goal no one can quarrel with. He started with the most elementary empirical experiences and ended with the subtlest abstractions. The dimension of the work thus was all-encompassing. By training and experience Hegel was primarily a historian of philosophy. But in the Phenomenology he far exceeded the usual role of a historian in the sense that he attempted to synthesize and give a coherent form to the whole body of human knowledge. The whole range of human experience was the subject of his treatise. One of his problems in this connection was to weed out the pretentious pseudo-sciences such as "Phrenology," "Physiognomy" and the like. The lengthy treatments he gave to these "sciences" may surprise us, but were he to write the book again today he would, I fear, find equally hollow branches of learning to be dealt with. His omission or inadequate treatment of some of the bona fide sciences, chemistry for example, may be explained by the fact that he treated them elaborately in subsequent works. The same is true of music and fine arts. However, the omission of these and other aspects of human experience from his book was unjustified. Realizing this, no doubt, Hegel started to revise the Phenomenology, but unfortunately he did not live long enough to complete his revision.

Hegel has dominated the intellectual history of the last 150 years as either a master to be followed or a villain to be condemned. But the real significance of his legacy lies in the failure of his attempt to give a cohesive totality to all human experience. His failure became the supreme failure because of his genius. Aristotle, Plato and all other universal philosophers who set out to explain the totality of the universe as a rational whole had also failed. Thus unwittingly Hegel accomplished the opposite of what he set out to do, that is the unhinging of the natural sciences from their union with metaphysics.

Hegel's influence is felt on all the forms of historicistic philosophies of the twentieth century, Marxism, for instance, and philosophical idealism and existentialism. His attempt to cloak universal history with a metaphysical gown did fail, but his invocation of history itself to give meaning and continuity to the human experience is imitated by the new sciences of sociology, anthropology and other studies of culture.

The significance of The Phenomenology of Mind in 1967 is no less than in 1806. The fundamental questions Hegel attempted to answer are still raised and will be raised by intelligent men at all times. The meaningful existence of the total man in the total universe has become more problematic in the complexity and diversity of modern day empirical experiences. The fundamental questions relating to the nature and goal of man should, therefore, be asked again with even greater anxiety. There certainly will not be ready answers, but the very fact that these questions can still be raised is an index of our questing-questioning humanity.

Otto Lowenstein, The Senses, Penguin, 1966, $1.25.

Throughout the history of science scholars in various fields have pursued the study of the senses of man and his fellow animals. Within the last hundred years most of the great advances in our knowledge of the senses have been made by psychologists and physiologists. The psychologist frequently derives his interest in the senses from a concern for the way in which information about the external and internal environments reach and influence a behaving organism. The physiologist, although more competent than the psychologist in the technical details of nerve action and the biochemistry associated with the sensory systems of the body, may lack an interest in the implications of the sensory functions for the behavior of the animal under study. That the study of the sensory systems can become a meeting ground for the psychologist and the physiologist is made evident in The Senses, a book intended for both the student and interested layman. Lowenstein takes a broad view of both the psychological and physiological problems involved in the study of the senses of animals and man.

Lowenstein dispenses with the classical view that there are five senses and substitutes for it the proposition that animals (man included) respond to three basic types of energy: electromagnetic, mechanical and chemical. Various receptor organs, such as eyes, ears, noses, and the skin have become specialized for the conversion of this energy into nerve impulses. Upon reaching the brain, these impulses somehow produce what we call conscious experience. Considering electromagnetic or light energy, he deals first with broad considerations of its nature and influence on life. Organisms have developed in the course of evolution a wide variety of photoreceptors sensitive to light from various parts of the electromagnetic spectrum. Interestingly, the standard discussion of the human eye which follows and is to be found in all elementary texts on physiology and psychology is presented in lively fashion as a tutorial session in which student and teacher exchange information about optics and anatomy. Accounts of the visual receptor cell, the supposed mechanisms of photochemistry, the many problems posed by color vision, and the possibility of sensitivity in lower animals to kinds of electromagnetic energy such as infra-red radiation to which man is insensitive follow. It is characteristic of Lowenstein's approach that the varied and fascinating sensory capabilities of other animals are considered along with those of man. Two criticisms are possible, however. Occasionally a complex topic such as color blindness or near- and far-sightedness is treated too briefly and in a way which might confuse the layman. A second is Lowenstein's citation of British authorities to the exclusion of most others. The overemphasis on British research goes so far that the three receptor theory of color vision commonly ascribed to Thomas Young and most frequently to Hermann Helmholtz is credited only to Young.

In his consideration of sensitivity to mechanical energy Lowenstein begins with the balance mechanisms of the inner ear, skin receptors, and the sense organs of the joints and muscles. Then he takes up hearing, casting the standard anatomical and physiological material in the form of a lecture followed by a question and answer session. It gives the reader an appreciation of the complexity of problems of hearing and of the manifold responses of various species to sound waves. Even though little is known about sensitivity to chemical energy, the chapter on taste and smell succeeds admirably in presenting both what is now known and current speculation. The discussion of the taste and olfactory organs located on the bodies and extremities of some fishes and insects leaves little doubt that man is among those animals which take the least advantage of chemical sensitivity.

After a brief and too superficial chapter on those parts of the nervous system which serve the various sense organs, Lowenstein presents his "philosophy of sensation." An artist, a biologist, a physicist and a philosopher develop in discussion the view that the consciousness of a sensory experience is a private event and therefore unavailable for scientific study. For example, the relationship between the redness of a rose and a person's perception of it need not be related in any causal way to the pattern of the optic nerve impulses reaching the visual area of his brain simply because the "redness" of his experience cannot be publicly observed. In contrast, it is relatively simple to relate electrical events in the brain to the report by an individual that he saw red. This distinction between the private conscious experience and the public report by an observer is one of the most basic assumptions made today by the psychologist and sensory physiologist.

The outstanding accomplishment of the book exists in its willingness to abandon the self-centered idea that man's five senses are the only senses worth studying. The remarkable varieties of response to physical energy are too extensive to ignore; man is myopic when he examines only himself. For its size, Lowenstein's book is surprisingly thorough and his use of the fictitious tutorial, experiment, lecture, or discussion is a refreshing exception to the usual didactic style of most scientific writing. Except for minor problems of emphasis and interpretation, this fascinating account is highly recommended. —David E. Crowley

Reaction and Reminiscence

John Harrison, The Reactionaries: Yeats, Lewis, Pound, Eliot, Lawrence. A Study of the Anti-Democratic Intelligentsia. Schocken Books, 1967, $6.00.

In 1946, George Orwell wrote: "The relationship between fascism and the literary intelligentsia badly needs investigation, and Yeats might well be the starting point." John Harrison's new book is at last such a study. In it he examines what he calls "the strange and disturbing phenomenon that five of the greatest literary figures of the century, W. B. Yeats, Wyndham Lewis, Ezra Pound, T. S. Eliot, and D. H. Lawrence, were attracted by Italian and German fascism before the Second World War and in Pound's case, during and after the war."

Harrison betrays his unhappiness, almost embarrassment, in writing this book and bends over backwards to understand, even sympathize, with the political naïveté and philosophical confusion often exhibited in these writers' overt attempts to influence their society. Yeats's aristocratic snobbery, Lewis's cynically narrow view of human nature, Pound's absurd economic theories and blatant anti-Semitism, Eliot's insistence that only an authoritarian society provides the setting for the production of great art, and Lawrence's blind indictment of materialism and the machine receive scholarly, deliberate, and dispassionate treatment in this book. Harrison does have opinions, nonetheless, and his style is to scold angrily when his own patience is tried beyond reason. On Lewis's claim that it is in the best interests of the people to establish a fascist society in order to realize their potential resources, Harrison replies with exasperation: "Lewis is in a hopeless muddle here. How can people be thrown back on their own resources if society is rigidly centralized, and all responsibility for government removed from the masses and put on to a ruling class?"

In the first chapter the author leads us through the complexities of nineteenth-century European political theory, which he claims is the source of the anti-democratic sentiments of these writers. There is a much necessary oversimplification here, but to my mind some serious omissions. A thorough discussion of T. E. Hulme's combination of aesthetic and political philosophy, especially in his seminal essay "Romanticism and Classicism," would be in order. Written in 1913, it violently attacks the humanist and enlightenment view of man and advocates that both poetry and life be "un-romantic," formalistic in structure, disciplined and precise. This prescription became a stylistic manifest for Pound and Eliot in the early years and for Yeats after 1916.

Each of the following chapters is devoted to a single author. Harrison quotes generously to give the reader a sense of the writer's mode of thought and methods of argument and relates them to each other by use of selective contrasts and comparison. This strategy works especially well for an investigation of this type, but it creates problems. In his zeal to illustrate he often ignores the important elements of tone, voice, and the internal relations within works. Harrison is at his best, however, when he compares and contrasts general ideas and influences. He shows how Yeats's distrust of democracy stems from fears about the ability of the masses to maintain a level of culture conducive to art. Yeats saw hope in the aristocratic ideal, and in the stability of the traditions of noble families, which he celebrated in the poems on Lady Gregory's household and also in his versions of the Renaissance and Neo-classical "house poem." Harrison nicely distinguishes between Yeats's and Pound's objections to democratic government, which for Pound arose from an almost pathological hatred of finance capitalism. He rightly emphasizes Pound's essential humanity and his sympathy for the ordinary man, qualities seldom observed in the other four authors.

In summing up, Harrison cites these five writers' fundamental desire for political and social stability, order, and permanence as necessary conditions for great art. It seems to me that this impulse transcends mere politics and reveals itself in the mythologies of these writers. Yeats's cosmology, Eliot's Anglo-Catholicism, Lewis's and Pound's faith in the state, and Lawrence's devotion to the life impulse reflect attempts to create imaginatively an objective order of value within which to write and by which to measure truth and explain human destiny. The political thinking of these writers, which Harrison discusses so well, can be seen finally, I think, as one facet of the artist's perpetual "rage for order." —Donald C. Mell

Knut Hamsun, On Overgrown Paths, Paul Eriksson, 1967' $5.00.

Many of us remember with nostalgia reading Knut Hamsun's The Growth of the Soil, a book portraying the hardships experienced by a pioneer in settling a new land. It reminded us of our ancestors' conquest of this great continent on which we presently thrive in our bewilderment. Full of the grim details of the frontier, the book portrayed life as a series of struggles against the elements and the self, a theme still with Hamsun in the book he completed and published at ninety, three years before his death in 1952. "We are all of us on a journey to a land where we will arrive in good time. We have no reason to hasten, we take events as they occur along the way. It is only fools who grumble at heaven and hit upon big words for these events, which are more lasting than we and cannot be avoided. Yes, friend, how indeed they last and are unavoidable!"

After a dozen years of wandering about northern Europe and America during which he was a farmer's handyman, shopkeeper, streetcar conductor in Chicago, and lecturer on French literature at the University of Minnesota, Hamsun began a highly successful career as a novelist with the publication of Hunger (1888) at the age of twenty-nine. Though his finest work was done by 1920 when he was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature, Hamsun continued writing during the thirties and forties, but by the time of the German invasion of Norway was living in essential retirement as occasional writer and farmer on his small estate, Nørholm, near Grimstad on the southeast coast. On Overgrown Paths is an oblique account of his life and thoughts during the three-year period between his arrest for treason on June 14, 1945, and the Supreme Court's sustaining of his conviction on June 24, 1948, by which time he was once again living at Nørholm, having been released after his conviction because of his "permanently impaired facilities."

In reading On Overgrown Paths one is constantly struck by the dubious potential in such a phrase as "impaired facilities." When he was arrested in 1945 at the age of eighty-six, Hamsun had high blood pressure, hardening of the arteries, occasional gout, was stone deaf, nearly blind, and had suffered a stroke. Yet it was only the four months he was incarcerated in a psychiatric clinic in Oslo that impaired his facilities to the extent that he almost lost his youthful capacity to enjoy and to endure life that his books constantly celebrate. On the next to the last page, he laments "Oh my permanently impaired facilities which make me so stupid," but his stupidity includes the strategem of a book that seems to move by fits and starts, but that clearly has a plan of the most devious sort, a plan that includes an exposure of himself but also of the system that maltreated him and forced such an exposure. Ostensibly an account of his days in a hospital, an old people's home, the psychiatric clinic, and the old people's home again before his trial and return to Nørholm, the book is a self-examination of how an old man stands up in the way he has chosen to walk, even how he comes to recognize that guilt which is the common denominator of us all.

Yet Hamsun gives us not merely an account of his daily experiences and thoughts, for his is the novelist's technique of using narrative to express theme. A seemingly ridiculous reminiscence of a foolish Russian trader temporarily marooned in a small Swedish town and his idiotic "Oh, my wonderful saintly Russia," an expostulation immediately undercut by a lady shopkeeper's "Homesickness has made him hysterical," leads to Hamsun's later insistence on his love of home, his native land, and his basic patriotism. He underscores this love by speaking of decades past in the Dakotas and of a girl named Bridget, who with her mother had deserted the family homestead to set up a sweets shop in town. "Imagine young Bridget's not throwing herself prostrate upon the ground and wailing when her childhood home was sold! It had a little path down into the woods, and in the trees in the woods were songbirds which were now left behind. And there was spring and flowers and heaven's sweet rain and the waving grain on a summer's day. Had Bridget forgotten all that? And the brook that ran so prettily across the earth, it too was sold. Lord God Father, the brook has been sold!" All of which reënforces his insistence in the statement for information's sake that he made at his trial. Defending his belief that not to oppose the Nazis was to bring Norway into "high rank among the Germanic lands of Europe," he went on to say: "During my relatively long life and in all the countries I have traveled in and among all kinds of people I mingled with, I have unceasingly preserved and exalted the homeland in my heart. And I intend to go on keeping my fatherland there while I await my final sentence."

Fascinating as the reminiscence of a man struggling with lonely old age, of a national celebrity accused of collaboration with the enemy, of a sage serenely amused at the scurry of contemporary life, this little book is one with a bright moment on every page. —Henry B. Prickitt

Foreign Policy: Europe—Asia, Then—Now

T. R. Fehrenbach, F. D. R.'s Undeclared War, 1939 to 1941, David McKay, 1967, $6.50.

Recent charges of "brainwashing," "credibility gap," and Congressional impotence in the field of foreign policy signal the approach of a presidential election year. In this light, T. R. Fehrenbach's account of America's entry into World War II is both timely and provocative. Fehrenbach, author of the best-selling This Kind of War (about Korea), argues that when the European War began in 1939, President Franklin D. Roosevelt's great problem was "building a new American consensus on foreign policy." As an adroit politician, "he could not afford, in his own estimation, to be unpopular, even while the world went to hell." During the next two years Roosevelt, blocked by Congressional opposition to American participation in foreign affairs and by a laggard public opinion, created "striking precedents in the use of Presidential power."

When the Nazi blitzkrieg crushed France in the spring of 1940, America reached a fateful turning point: with far-reaching decisions to aid the Allies, the country departed from strict neutrality. Moving behind the scenes, Roosevelt started making commitments to Britain "which must have eventually led to war—without revealing them to the public." As "the greatest consensus President," he did not want to fight a President's war, but the people did not realize that England, by containing a hostile Nazi Germany behind the ocean, was strategically vital to America. Consequently, Roosevelt had to convince Americans that rearmament would preserve the social and economic gains of the New Deal without leading the country into war. Even after being reelected, he feared taking a divided country into war; he knew that if he carried out his own Administration's policy of advancing the zone of American defense, he ran the risk of involving the nation in a shooting war. Although "several hundred far-seeing strategists" urged him to take the risk, he refused a role which would have brought public disfavor. The passage of Lend-lease was described, therefore, as a reasonable way to "keep the United States out of war." But in response to the exigencies of the moment, Roosevelt, on the advice of Harry Hopkins, wisely extended aid to Soviet Russia after the Nazi invasion; their great strategic mistake—their belief that the attitude of the Soviet leaders toward the West could be changed—came later. This 1941 decision, based on Allied weakness and not on ideology, "inevitably shaped the emergence of the postwar world."

Meanwhile, Washington, which never understood Japan's genuine economic needs, refused to apply military pressure in the Far East at an early date or to grant economic concessions later. Either could have prevented a war which resulted from "an almost tragic failure o diplomacy on both sides." When the intercepted Japanesef code revealed an imminent attack somewhere, Roosevelt refused advice to strike first. "At all costs—his whole policy had shown this—he had to avoid a President's war." More important than his political career, his party, or his programs was the grave danger to the country: a divided nation might not successfully wage war. Throughout 1941 public opinion polls indicated that the nation would fight only if attacked first. Fehrenbach, dismissing as "nonsense" any deliberate sacrifice of Pearl Harbor, concludes that despite the Hawaii bloodshed, "the President's course was proved correct." Unity occurred only after the sneak attack.

Considering Fehrenbach's familiarity with the extensive literature available, several generalizations are unfortunate and misleading. His opening thesis that Roosevelt recognized Munich as a geopolitical defeat is erroneous, and Harry Hopkins was not the only influential American to argue that Russia would survive the Nazi onslaught. But these shortcomings are more than offset by incisive comments on Roosevelt's war mobilization, America First, the Russian graveyard for the Wehrmacht, and the irony of Japan's defeat. And, finally, Fehrenbach clearly shows that the President failed to create a true consensus in favor of American power abroad. Perhaps Roosevelt was "too fond of popularity, or even office" ever to act in defiance of majority opinion. Considering the country's reluctance to accept responsibility, the President "acted with superb political skill." But Fehrenbach concludes, "Government by consent could not be translated forever to mean government by the Gallup Poll." The relevance of this lively account of our entry into war for the defense of freedom and democracy—a premise which the New Left revisionism denies—lies in Fehrenbach's discussion of Presidential leadership, public opinion, and national interests at a time of democratic foreign policy in crisis.

Stuart R. Schram, Mao Tse-tung. Simon & Schuster, 1967, $7.95.

John K. Fairbank, China: The People's Middle Kingdom and the U.S.A., Harvard University Press, 1967, $3.95.

Few in the flood of recent books on China have been written for the intelligent non-specialist. University presses issue a stream of monographs for the benefit of the Asian scholar and commercial presses publish the eyewitness reports of those who have visited the mainland but all too often have no background in Asian affairs. The situation is improving, however, as the books here under review testify. Mr. Schram's book is by all odds the best biography yet of Mao Tse-tung. He has succeeded in rescuing Mao from the mythmakers who are at work both in the west, portraying Mao as the despot who has reduced 700 million Chinese to abject slavery, and in China itself, where he is the idol of a personality cult which threatens to make Stalin's accomplishments in this direction look like the efforts of a fumbling amateur. Yet despite the propagandists of Washington and Peking, Mao is not an incarnation of all China. Much about him is in the Chinese tradition, but he has brought something new to his country. No longer is the old description of the Chinese as the "most rebellious and least revolutionary of peoples" true. China has since the 1920's been in a continual state of revolution, against foreign powers and against her own Confucian past, and Mao has both ridden the revolution and helped to guide its direction.

Yet his road to power was far from smooth, and Schram is particularly good at detailing the ways in which Mao kept at bay both his friends and enemies in the past—not only the Kuomintang, which sought to destroy him, but also Moscow, which wanted to use the Chinese revolution for Russian aims, and Mao's own Communist rivals for power in China, who distrusted his plans to build a Marxist revolution based not on the proletariat, but rather on the hitherto apparently apathetic peasantry in the countryside.

Students of Marxism for years have debated whether Mao is "original" (that is, whether he adds anything new to the Marxist-Leninist canon) in his reliance on the peasantry. As Schram aptly points out, much of this is beside the point; his real originality comes in his sensing, forty years ago, the sheer human force of the peasants, in assessing their potentialities, and in recognizing that the peasant question, which is essentially a question involving human beings, was the key to the revolution. And today, within the totalitarian structure of China, this old humanist core remains; central to Maoism is a belief in the potentialities of the human spirit, its ability (properly led) to overcome any obstacles which stand in its way, whether they are the obstacles of foreign aggression, or simply the lack of the training and technological skills necessary to modernization. This helps make Maoism the influence it is today—this belief that the unchained human spirit, which is the motive force of history, exists now in its purest form not in western capitalism, or in Soviet revisionism, but among the peasant masses of Asia, Africa, and Latin America, and it is these masses who will determine the future course of world history.

What are we to do with this China that Mao is building? Professor Fairbank, the dean of China scholars in this country, addresses himself to this question. His answers will please neither the optimists, who believe that only American paranoia is responsible for keeping Peking from behaving with sweet reasonableness, nor the cold warriors, who see Mao as today's Hitler, and call for a preventive war against him (as a local newspaper recently did).

Throughout his book, Fairbank warns of the dangers that will last as long as we and the Chinese continue to see each other in mythological terms. To us, Peking is part of a vast "communist conspiracy," and our myopia is matched by Peking's world view, which simplifies the complex processes of history into terms which are suitable only for a child's Marxist primer. As long as we base our policy on such beliefs, we are playing Mao's game. He needs an external enemy, an imperialist villain, to help unify his country. Until 1945 the Japanese played the part admirably, invading an unfamiliar country in a spirit of blindly militarist anti-communism, thereby making possible communism's triumph; since then we have too willingly assumed this role.

It is worth remembering, as Fairbank points out, that no matter how successful China's modernization, she will always remain a country in which population is pressing on resources. Nothing we do or do not do is likely to change this. But there are steps we can take which will both ease her growing pains and diminish the likelihood of a conflict with her, and they are steps which will not mean abandoning our interests. Containment and cooperation are not mutually exclusive policies; the author reminds us that their interaction is of the essence of diplomacy. It is a lesson we are just beginning to learn in our dealings with the Soviet Union, but we are still a long way from this wisdom as far as China is concerned.

Obituaries

1900—Word has been received of the death of Emily Parker Lee (Mrs. Samuel). Following her graduation from college she was a graduate student in chemistry and physics at Middlebury. She taught in Hawley, Mass. for a short time and after her marriage in 1902 taught English for three years in the Philippine Islands. Since her husband's death in 1958, Mrs. Lee has made her home in West Rutland, Vt. She is survived by three sons, John, Charles and Thomas. Mrs. Lee was a member of Alpha Chi sorority.

1907—Gwendoline Hughes, 83, died Sept. 2 in Rutland, Vt. She had been a teacher in Fair Haven (Vt.) High School and Haverhill (Mass.) High School until her retirement. She is survived by a sister, Ella Hughes. Miss Hughes was a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority.

1913—Hammond Ladd, 76, died suddenly July 6 in Augusta, Me. Mr. Ladd was a civil engineer and from 1930–1960 was chief engineer for United Parcel of New York. He was a graduate of Missouri School of Mines. He received an E. M. degree from Oklahoma School of Mines and had studied for a year at Harvard Law School before entering Middlebury. He is survived by his wife, the former Edith Briggs, two daughters, Mrs. Mary Hair and Mrs. Edith Evans, and two sons, Hammond, Jr., '50, and Richard W.

1917—Word has been received of the death of Paul Kent in March. Mr. Kent was a business engineer. He was a member of Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity.

1921—Charles C. Cutting, 69, died Sept. 10 following a long illness. He had been employed by Middlebury College for forty-three years until his retirement a few years ago. He had been active in the Masonic order and had held many offices in the order; during World War II he was active in Civil Defense; and he was a trustee of the Methodist Church at the time of his death. Survivors are his wife, Mildred Scarbarrough, a son, Charles, and a daughter, Mrs. John Child (Joanne, '53). Mr. Cutting was a member of Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity.

1921—John W. "Jack" Mead, 67, former teacher and football coach of Warren Harding High School, Bridgeport, Conn. and former commanding officer of the Connecticut National Guard's 242nd AAA Group, died late in the summer in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. He served as Harding High School's first athletic coach in all major sports from the time the East Side school opened in 1925 until 1946. His teams captured two state football titles and eleven city crowns, two state baseball championships and nine city titles in that

Moses G. Hubbard

Moses G. Hubbard, '13, a trustee of Middlebury College since 1945, died on July 29 in Strong Memorial Hospital, Rochester, N.Y. He was 74 years old.

Mr. Hubbard was a graduate of Columbia Law School and since 1919 had practiced law in Utica, N.Y., where, at the time of his death, he was senior partner in the law firm of Hubbard, Felt and Fuller and chief counsel of the Commercial Travelers Mutual Accident Association.

Dr. William P. Tolley, chancellor of Syracuse University, in awarding Mr. Hubbard an honorary degree of doctor of laws at the dedication convocation of Utica College's Burnstone Campus of Syracuse, cited him as follows:

"Moses Gilbert Hubbard—the words of Alcaeus in ancient Greece have a relevance for modern Utica:

Not housed finely roofed or the stones of walls well-builded, nay nor canals and dockyards, make the city, but men able to use their opportunity.

"As a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Middlebury College and holder of the baccalaureate in law from Columbia University, you have been for forty-four abundant years a maker of the modern Utica. As a distinguished attorney, your zeal for public service grounded in your profession, has reached out to fulfill every opportunity for the enhancement of community life in the nation, in the State of New York, in Oneida County, and in Utica. Clear and incisive mind, responsible citizen, inspiring leader of men, you bring the highest standards of integrity to the world of law and the general good.

"For using your opportunities with exceptional excellence, and particularly for opening a vast horizon of new opportunities for others as president of the Utica College Foundation, we are proud to honor you."

Mr. Hubbard was a former president of the New York Young Men's Christian Association and a former commander of the New York State American Legion. He held several posts in the New York State Bar Association.

Surviving are his widow, the former Phyllis Hopkins, '13; two sons, Moses Jr., '41, and Eugene, '47; a daughter, Phyllis Hubbard Patchett (Mrs. Sidney), '40.

George H.V. Allen

George H. V. Allen, a trustee emeritus of Middlebury College, died on July 26 at his home in Fair Haven, Vt., at the age of 89.

Mr. Allen was first elected a member of the board in 1938 and served for sixteen years as secretary and treasurer from 1939 to 1954. For many years he was president of the Allen National Bank in Fair Haven. He also served as Vermont Commissioner of Banking and as a director of the National Life Insurance Co.

At commencement in June of 1949, the honorary degree of doctor of laws was conferred upon Mr. Allen. The citation stated, in part, ". . . modest beyond belief, a shrewd but ever kindly observer and judge of your fellowman; sagacious in your counsel and skilled in affairs of business and administration; for more than a decade by generous, wise and conscientious service to your college, you have set an almost unattainable standard for all trustees of the land."

A long-time friend of the Allen family commented: "If asked to name the quality that stood out most prominently in George Allen, I think I would choose to mention first of all his extraordinary thoughtfulness—his desire to be helpful to any person or to any cause or organization in which he believed—and always without the slightest publicity. He thought around things from every angle, determined what was best for the individual or cause and then acted. He was not a man 'of many words' but when he spoke, his words were well worth listening to.

"His judgments were sound, his business insight keen and his sense of humor delightful. His individual philosophy was based on a pronounced integrity and sense of fairness. When asked for an opinion, his answer could be depended upon to be frank and honest.

"In thinking over the kind of scholarship fund he wished to set up at Middlebury, his first thought was for 'The Forgotten Woman' as he designated it—referring to the student who does not have a particularly high standing in scholarship although she may well be the kind of woman that Middlebury would like to see represent the College in her home town. Thus through his thoughtfulness, the Cecile Child Allen Student Aid Fund was established which well illustrates the thoughtfulness which underlaid so many of Mr. Allen's deeds. This fund seems to be filling a wonderfully significant need."

George Allen never sought personal gain from his position. His satisfaction came from watching Middlebury turn potential into achievement. He was indeed a believer that trusteeship is not an end in itself, but a means of creating something beyond oneself. A college that has grown, prospered, and enriched the lives of hundreds of students, as Middlebury has, testifies that he has played an important role in fulfilling this aim.

A 1901 graduate of Princeton, he is survived by two daughters, Miss Elizabeth Allen of Fair Haven, and Mrs. Katherine Parrish of Hamilton, Ohio; three grandchildren; and one great-grandchild.

sport. His basketball teams were frequent contenders for state and New England honors in the 1930's. Born in Rutland, Vt., he had lived in the Bridgeport area most of his life. Colonel Mead joined the Connecticut National Guard in 1930 as a private and rose through the ranks to become a full colonel and to take over command positions in World War II. He was honored for his contribution to athletics at a testimonial dinner in May, 1960, attended by more than 500 persons. On Feb. 2, 1965, he was presented with the "Outstanding Sportsman" award of the Greater Bridgeport Old Timers Athletic Association. Survivors are his wife, Mrs. Nadine Smith Mead, a son, Jerry Mead of West Haven, and two granddaughters.

1923—Barbara Stilphen Hillers (Mrs. F. J.), 67, died June 4. Before her marriage in 1927 Mrs. Hillers taught for three years in Medford, Mass. She is survived by her husband and two sons, Robert and John. Mrs. Hillers was a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority.

1924—Herbert S. Corttis, 65, died July 27. Since he graduated from college Mr. Corttis had been a store manager for the W. T. Grant Co. in several of their stores, the last ten years being in Lockport, N. Y. He is survived by his wife, a son, Herbert E., and a daughter, Pamela. Mr. Corttis was a member of Kappa Delta Rho fraternity.

1927—John S. Dinkel, 63, died suddenly on Sept. 16 at his summer home in Warren, N. H. Following his graduation from Middlebury he was a student in the business training program of the General Electric Co. He had been an accountant for the General Electric Co. in their offices in Schenectady, N. Y., Columbus and Cincinnati, O., and from 1942 until his retirement, auditor in the company's office in New Orleans, La. Survivors are his wife, the former Ruth Simmons, '28, and a son, 1929—Kenneth A. Shutts, 58, died suddenly June 21 in Alexandria, Va. Following his graduation from Middlebury he taught in Simsbury (Conn.) High School for twelve years, New Canaan, Conn., and Winchester, Mass., until 1943 when he served with the Marine Corps during World War II. After the war he resumed teaching at Hillyer Junior College at the University of Hartford in Connecticut until he was recalled to active duty during the Korean conflict. At the time of his death Mr. Shutts was an educational specialist in Military Science at the U. S. Army Engineer Center, Ft. Belvoir, Va. He had done graduate work at Columbia University and received an M. A. degree from there in 1938. Survivors are his wife, the former Anne Clark, and a son, Kenneth P., Jr. Mr. Shutts was a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity.

1950—John H. Halpin, 51, died suddenly on June 21. He had been a selectman and a special tax appraiser for the Town of Middlebury and moderator for the Union School Board. Mr. Halpin is survived by his wife, the former Noreen Force, two daughters, Christine and Jane, a son, Peter, and a brother, Thomas, '50.

1961—William N. Badgley died Jan. 25. Since his graduation from College, Mr. Badgley had been assistant manager of the Summit Sport Shop in Summit, N. J. He is survived by his wife, the former Muriel Sudduth, and two sons, William Duff and Christopher Selden. Mr. Badgley was a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity.

THE STUDENT'S PLACE

institutional sector, the student's place is again relatively minor. The institutional sector includes those activities that keep the College running, from maintaining a campus mail service to planning the investment of endowment funds. The News Letter, which keeps alumni and alumnae informed about the College and the parents' magazine—Your Family and Middlebury—provide an essential function. Without these publications much of the interest of alumni-ae and parents would be lost and the College would suffer. The College's business administration staff, unknown to students unless they fail to pay their bills, keeps the College on sound financial footing. These activities, and many more that could be listed, contribute to the well-being of the College as a whole.

The student's place within the institutional sector is again of small stature. He has little interest and experience to be in a position of deciding what course the College will follow as an institution. And he is here for such a short time that he has no place in the administrative machinery that keeps the college going on a day-to-day basis. Hence it is only logical that the student plays no great role in controlling the institution.

It is in the third sector, the supporting sector, that the student's place is significant. The supporting sector encompasses those activities which administer to the student in his non-academic life. Included in this sector are the feeding and housing of students, entertainment, and recreation. These are the activities that most concern the student. Consider the Board of Governors, one of Middlebury's major organizations. The student members of the Board's committees are allowed with administrative financial support almost free rein in providing cultural and recreational activities for Middlebury students. Or consider the fraternities, which demonstrate the student's capacity to assume responsibility for food, housing, entertainment, and social life. It is no accident that one of the most powerful students on campus is the head-waiter in Proctor Hall, who can distribute waiting jobs and who has the authority to remove a student from the dining hall.

We may conclude that the student's place within the College is most significant in those areas that most affect his living conditions for these are the areas that most personally concern him. In the academic and institutional sectors either society or the short duration of his stay here preclude his taking a significant part in academic matters or the running of the institution. Thus the agitation on the part of Middlebury students has not been for representation on faculty committees or the right of student examination of the budget but rather for changes in dormitory visiting hours and automobile regulations.

It is a reasonable prediction that Middlebury's Commission on Student Life will not call for any significant change in the so-called power structure. Rather it will most likely recommend more student control, or at least more consultation between students and administration, over those matters that most concern students. Middlebury will follow the lead of the Brown University Committee which concluded that "those affected by student conduct policies and procedures ought to participate significantly in the making and in the enforcing of these policies." Meanwhile, while we wait for the Commission's recommendations, "student power" will remain a slogan without much punch. The powers-that-be are in no danger of students overrunning the administration buildings and seizing control. It's just not in the cards.

Editor's Note: The Campus, student newspaper, in a lead editorial commenting on the formation of the Committee on Student Life commented:

> "We shall be eagerly awaiting the recommendations of the new Commission on Student Life.
> "We think that the formation of the Commission is a potentially significant event in the life of this College. We hope that out of its deliberations will emerge policies more reasonable and more appropriate to a liberal community than the traditional ones.
> "Certainly President Armstrong's injunctions to the Commission exhibit an attitude of refreshing openness. Previously the worth of the residence requirement, or of the present parietal hours regulations were treated as a priori truths. Though the Administration was hasty to disavow "knee-jerk Victorianism," justification of college rules seemed often the giving of bad reasons for what was believed on instinct. It will be interesting to see how well the old policies stand up under careful scrutiny.
> "Our only objection is that we would rather see the student body choose its own members for such a commission, rather than having them selected, with however benevolent intent, from above. The implicit recognition of student demands as valid, rather than as products of adolescent fancy or the irresponsible noise of a transient population is good to see. But it must be noted that the Commission on Student Life contains the seeds of a new concept of "student government" here. Given a voice in the seating of student members on such commissions in the future, the students could become partners with the administration in a kind of social contract, rather than playing roles in a musical-comedy parliament.

"The Commission's most valuable innovation will be to draw on student experience. The sociological and psychological studies which are the Commission's texts will provide excellent guidelines; but it should be kept in mind that there are dimensions of human life which are inaccessible in the terms of social science. If we students have occasionally failed to appreciate the exigencies of administration, our administrators have often forgotten what it is like to be a student. We have implicit confidence that the student members of the Commission will be for them a powerful reminder."

FOOTBALL IS A WAY OF LIFE

The Middlebury coaching staff begins meeting in late August to make plans for the fall camp which opens early in September. In planning the practice schedule for camp the coaches normally require 65 hours of field work before the first game. Most of this must be done at camp during the double daily sessions two weeks prior to the opening of classes.

Camp life is a busy time with breakfast at 8 a.m., the morning practice, 10–11:30 and lunch at noon. The second session runs from 3 to 5 p.m. with the evening meal at 6 p.m. Board talks are held at 7:30 p.m. in the Field House and players must be in bed by 11 p.m.

Arriving on campus usually the day after Labor Day, the Panthers receive physical examinations at the initial session. The team begins conditioning workouts and sometime during the first week take time out for "Press Day" to pose in uniform for shots used throughout the season by newspapers and television.

Following about a week of hard work, and an intra-squad scrimmage, the Panthers get their first real game action in a scrimmage against another college (usually Amherst) team outside the regular schedule. This practice game gives coaches a chance to see their players under game conditions. Sometimes these games run an extra quarter or two to allow the coaches to get a good look at the entire squad.

"Here at football camp the team's plans are made and all the basic preparations for the season are gone over," Duke said. "It is the only time the squad members have a good chance to think, eat and sleep football with nothing else on their minds," he added.

With the close of football camp and the season opener only a week away the Middlebury coaching staff must make decisions in the selection of a starting lineup. The performance of a player in the pre-season practice is usually a major determining factor.

Another season has arrived and now it's time to put plays, theories and players to the test. It has required a vast amount of preparation, but when the opening whistle sounds and the team begins to move it seems well worthwhile to everyone connected with the game.

Duke doesn't seem to mind the long hours and pressures of coaching for he has been in the business since 1932 when he earned his B.A. degree from Middlebury.

"Coaching college athletics is a most rewarding and enjoyable occupation," Duke said. "If from coaching, I can give some young man something he can use later in life, then I feel my efforts are worthwhile," he explained.

Football is an important part of higher education in that it demands concentration, mental alertness and physical toughness, Duke said. It teaches an individual how to work closely and effectively with others for the good of the group and not just himself, he added.

TRIBUTE TO DR. NEUSE

competition of other schools and of travel and study abroad. Then in 1959 another venture was undertaken. I had organized the Middlebury Graduate School in Paris in 1949, and the one in Madrid in 1951. Shortly thereafter, with laudable initiative, Dr. Neuse submitted a detailed plan for a similar Graduate School in Germany, and recommended locating it in Mainz where we had good friends in Dr. Wentzlaff-Eggebert and others. He was persuaded to wait a few years to watch the experience of the other two schools; but in 1959 his eagerness could no longer be refused, and he was sent to Mainz to make the necessary arrangements.

The School in Mainz has been a great success, with an average enrollment of over forty. Dr. Neuse has twice been Studienleiter, and has made several extra trips to Germany to assist in special situations. The School has added considerably to his administrative burden, since he has been continuously responsible for the selection of its students, the control of its curriculum, and countless academic and material problems. The volume of correspondence with German authorities and with students, and the complexities of academic and financial records, have been very great. He has always handled them with wisdom, promptness and accuracy.

The German Summer School at Middlebury has shown a surprising and dramatic growth in the past decade, proportionately far greater than the country-wide increase in German enrollments in colleges and secondary schools. From 79 students in 1956, the School increased rapidly to 155 in 1959, and has enrolled approximately 230 in each of the last three years, reaching maximum capacity at that figure. This tripling of the size of the School at the same time tripled the work-load for its Director-Dean. Greater available space on the Middlebury campus, and the attractiveness of the Mainz program account for part of the increase; but the primary explanation is the high quality of operation which Werner Neuse has created. His complete familiarity with the national situation in the teaching of German, his wide acquaintance among the leaders of German culture, in university and government circles in this country and in Germany, his competence in administrative procedure, his meticulous punctual efficiency, and above all his insistence upon rigorous standards of quality—all these constitute the basic reason for the notable success of the Middlebury German School under his direction.

Werner Neuse is also nationally and internationally recognized as a scholar and administrator. He was President of the American Association of Teachers of German for three years; and was elected an Honorary Member of it in 1966. He was Editor-in-Chief of "The German Quarterly" for five arduous years. He has been First Vice President of the Modern Language Association of America. The respect with which he is held in Germany is witnessed by his Goethe Medal in Silver from the Goethe Institute in Munich; his Merit Cross First Class, and the Grand Cross from the Federal Republic of Germany. The Johannes Gutenberg University in Mainz named him "Ehrenburger." He has published at least six textbooks for the study of German in schools and colleges, and has contributed many articles to encyclopedias and professional journals.

His inexhaustible energy has long amazed me. Not only as his colleague, but as his neighbor, living across the street from him, I have had ample opportunity to admire his tremendous activity. For many years his routine work included, besides the Summer School and the School in Germany, the Chairmanship of the German Department during the academic year. This entailed the supervision of its majors and their independent study programs, teaching up to eighteen hours of classes a week in small but advanced classes in literature, plus the usual chores of committee work and the campus duties of a small college. No one knows how many hours he spent on his own "extra-curricular" activities as AATG President and Editor, author of textbooks and articles, scholar and student. Yet he also found time to be an ardent gardener; his beds of tulips in the spring were a delight from my window; and his gorgeous cactus blooms excited our admiration. No wonder that his study light burned very late at night.

Werner Neuse has distinguished himself, in all his work, both in Middlebury and in national councils, by his intelligent insight into the crux of any matter, his insistence upon high quality, and his wise caution. In faculty meetings, committees, consultations and in published articles, his voice has always been on the side of proven standards of quality, conservatism in the best sense as the basis for progress. His leadership has shown great initiative, but he warns against sacrificing present good for untested change. His voice is respected, since he has set the same high standards for himself as for others.

Now as he retires from the Directorship of the Middlebury German Summer School, having retired a year ago as Professor of German and Chairman of the Language Division at Middlebury College, I speak for all the Language Schools and for the College, as well as for Mrs. Freeman and myself personally, in wishing for him and for Mrs. Neuse good health, success and happiness in all his future activities. It has been a joy for me to work with him as a close friend and colleague during the past thirty-seven years. May he feel a warm and deep satisfaction in his great accomplishments, and a real sense of the congratulations and affection of his friends and colleagues.

TRIBUTE TO DR. FAYER

a generous Congress in recognition of a national need. Middlebury College agrees with the aims of the NDEA; but it has never applied for a Russian Institute under the NDEA, preferring to maintain our own time-tested standards and formulae for high quality, rather than sacrifice them to the ever-changing regulations governing applications for grants. We recognize, however, that this has made more difficult Dr. Fayer's search for eminent teachers; and students cannot be blamed if they are sometimes tempted away by large scholarships to inferior programs.

My deepest regret this evening is for the absence of Mrs. Margaret Fayer. Coming to Middlebury with Mischa as Librarian of the College, our beautiful new Library is a part of her memorial. But she was also the unofficial Associate Director of the Russian School, discreetly aiding in the planning, acting all the roles from hostess to personal counselor, secretary and house mother, and beloved by all. We have missed her very much since her death, but we believe that she is with us in spirit, sharing in this tribute to her husband.

Mischa Fayer, Middlebury College congratulates you and thanks you for the vision which you had in 1943 of the Russian Summer School. We applaud you even more for the courageous and constructive way in which you have brought it to effective realization. You have builded well, overcoming many difficulties and solving many problems. The edifice is solid and durable. Your successors, whoever they may be, will find the right course charted, and the essential guidelines clear. The comprehensive program and the high quality of instruction, with its basic rotating courses; the special characteristics and spirit of the school, its extra-curricular activities, and its devoted group of alumni—these are the real tribute to you, and they will endure. Your school will always be yours. A life spent in building an educational institution is the most satisfying and the most enduring of monuments, for it is built into the lives of others.

Now as you retire as Director of the Russian Summer School, as you retired in June as Chairman of the Russian Department, I extend to you in the name of Middlebury College, of President Armstrong, and for Mrs. Freeman and myself personally our sincere gratitude and congratulations for your splendid accomplishments here; and our best wishes for your good health, success and happiness in the challenging new position to which you go. Our work together during the past quarter century has been rich and very rewarding. I trust that you will feel in your new home and work the continuing presence of our admiration and warm friendship.

ALUMNI PROFILE

Pete of Middlebury is a partner in the New York investment firm of H. N. Whitney, Goadby and Company. His wife is the former Lili Knott and their youngsters are Janet 2, Lili 7, Kathy 10 and "Petey" 11. Petey already has taken to golf and has competed with his dad in the Father-and-Son Golf Association's annual tournament at Garden City, L. I.

While at Middlebury, Pete was captain and a star of the tennis team. After he won the 1953 New England interscholastic tennis championship as a student at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H. young Bostwick devoted summer months to tennis. In 1952 he competed in the nationals at Forest Hills and the following year he had the satisfaction of leading Vic Seixas, 3–1 in the first set of the Newport R. I. invitation before bowing 6–3, 6–1.

During one weekend when no tennis matches were scheduled at Middlebury, Coach Duke Nelson suggested that Pete enter the New England intercollegiate golf championship at Burlington, Vt. Pete already had taken lessons from a renowned teacher, the late Ernest Jones at Glen Head, L. I. On that trip to Burlington, Pete won the golf championship.

During the 1957 metropolitan amateur championship at Glen Cove, not far distant from his Locust Valley home on Long Island, Pete gained the semi-final. Although he lost to former British amateur champion, Bob Sweeny, 5 and 3, after they had been all even for 27 of the 36 hole match, the versatile young man became more of a golf bug than ever.

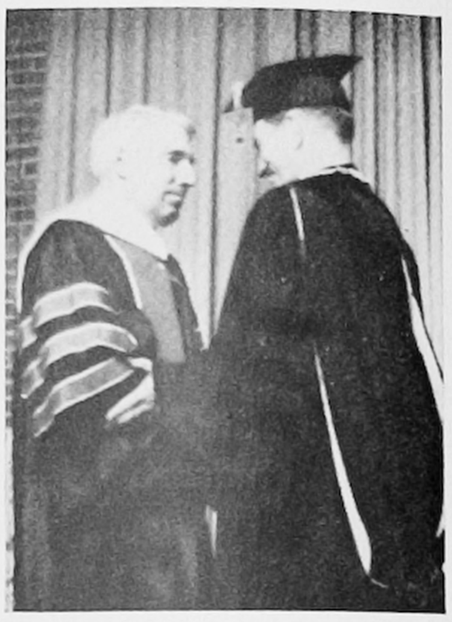
Two years later Pete qualified for both the United States Open at Winged Foot and the United States amateur at Colorado Springs. Although he did not gain the last 36 holes of the Open, he went to the fourth round of the amateur before losing a thrilling four extra hole match to Dick Yost, former Walker Cupper. On the Long Island amateur circuit, Pete has been extremely successful. He has won both the Richardson and Travis Memorial tournaments and has been club champion of the National Links Club at Southampton, eight times.

In 1966 he won the Long Island amateur championship and recently was runner-up for the 1967 New York State amateur golf honors, still using his unique putting method. He clenches his right fist around the top of the shaft as though he were about to turn an old fashioned coffee grinder. He keeps his right forearm stiff and parallel to the green. Then he places his left hand near the bottom of the shaft and strokes the ball. "It's helped me bring back my confidence," says Pete. When the United States Golf Association announced this style would likely be banned, Pete joshed: "Well, maybe this means I will have to go back to tennis." But it isn't likely that he will give up golf. Instead he will experiment and adopt, if the rules make it necessary, another technique.

One thing is certain, however, Pete Bostwick will be competing. Whether it's golf or another sport, he will be active in every season. This pleasing, handsome and refreshing young man is too firmly entrenched in the sports activities of the nation to be a standby for very long.

Bates Honors Dr. Armstrong

Dr. James I. Armstrong, president of the College, was awarded an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree by Bates College at inaugural ceremonies installing Dr. Thomas H. Reynolds as Bates' fifth president.



Dr. Armstrong and Dr. Reynolds

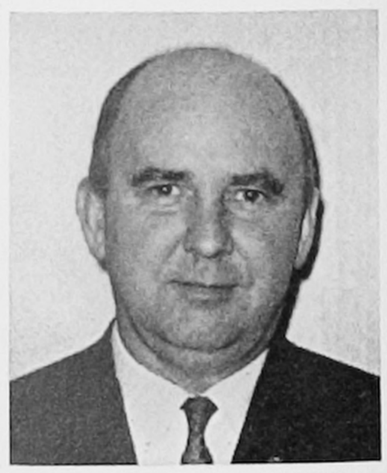
Dr. Reynolds served as Dean of the College at Middlebury from 1964 until he assumed his duties at Bates earlier this year. A member of the Middlebury faculty for eighteen years, President Reynolds was professor of history and also served as Dean of Men for six years.

President Armstrong, representing Middlebury at the inauguration, gave the introduction of Dr. Reynolds at ceremonies held in Lewiston, Maine.

In being presented for the honorary Doctor of Humane Letters, Dr. Armstrong was cited for his many public services and professional contributions in teaching the classics and the administration of Middlebury. His citation reads in part as follows: "Scholarly apostle of humanism, you left a secure position at one of the nation's finest universities to take on the challenge of guiding a small college. Four brilliant years in the presidency of Middlebury attest to your ability and your dedication."

College Appoints Medical Director

Dr. George F. Parton, Jr. has been appointed Medical Director at the College. In his new position at Middlebury he is responsible for planning new infirmary facilities to replace those on Château Road scheduled for removal when the College's new Music-Arts Center is completed in 1968. He will treat on campus all student ailments not requiring hospitalization and will administer all athletic physicals. Dr. Parton will also be in attendance at athletic events and will serve as medical inspector of all college facilities, particularly fraternity housing and feeding.



Dr. Parton

He received his A.B. degree from Washington and Lee University in 1942, and his M.D. from Cornell Medical School, 1945. Dr. Parton served as a captain in the U. S. Army Medical Corps before starting his first practice in Cambridge, Md., 1952–53. He has been in general medicine at Glastonbury, Conn., for the past thirteen years.

1967

REPORT OF ANNUAL GIVING

Middlebury College's traditional Annual Giving Program was re-established during the 1966–67 year following a one year temporary suspension for the Challenge Fund. Despite the fact that many Middlebury alumni, alumnae, parents and friends were committed to paying generous Challenge Fund pledges, the 1966–67 Annual Giving Program surpassed its goal of $150,000 by a gratifying total and achieved a final amount of $176,735.87.

This report records all gifts that made this important achievement possible and the contributions of all who maintained their annual giving by Challenge Fund gifts and pledge payments for the year ending June 30, 1967.

Alumni and friends of Middlebury College may establish continued giving to the Middlebury Alumni Fund by means of a memorial or named gift. Present Alumni endowment gifts are shown above.

Such a gift makes it possible for a person or a group to establish a living memorial to a classmate, friend, or relative. It may also be used by Alumni who having contributed annually to the College during their lives wish to perpetuate their donations and project their loyal support of the College beyond their lifetime by a bequest or permanent gift.

When memorial gifts of this nature are established, the principal amount of the gift is added to the Alumni Endowment of Middlebury Alumni Fund and identified there with the designated person's class. Income on this principal amount for the remainder of the year during which the gift is received, and in succeeding years, will be credited to the Alumni Fund with other annual gifts of members of the designated person's class. Each year the name of the donor or in the case of a memorial, the person in whose memory the fund was established, will be so listed with contributors from his or her class.

Permanent additions to the above Alumni Endowments may be made by Alumni and friends at anytime.

The following form may be employed for this purpose:

"I hereby give, transfer and deliver (or in the case of a bequest in a will 'I give and bequeath') to The President and Fellows of Middlebury College, a corporation of the State of Vermont, located at Middlebury, Vermont, the sum of . . . . . (or securities, properly described below) to constitute a gift in the name of (or as a memorial to) . . . . . This sum (or proceeds of securities) shall be kept invested by the Trustees of Middlebury College as a part of their Associated Trust Funds; and its share of the annual income utilized for the Alumni Fund, to be included therein among the contributions of members of the Class of . . . . . .

"After the death of the last known surviving member of the Class of . . . . . , the principal amount of this gift may be added by the Trustees of Middlebury College to unrestricted endowment funds of the College, and its share of the annual income utilized for general College purposes."
